POLITICAL NOTES.

—The Beaver county opposition ticket is exclusively Democratic. No "liberal" appears on it. Has the partnership been dissolved?

—Hon. Joseph Lambauch, of Northampton county, is strenuously urged by the Philadelphia Age for the nomination for State Treasurer at Wilkesbarre.

—Groesback says that the Democratic party "is spoiled;" and that a majority of the party will "agree that it will be wise to lay aside the old organization and enter into a new one."

—The King of Sweden and Norway has appointed Louis Bagger, formerly managing editor of the Washington Patriot, to the position of Vice Consul of those countries in the capitol. Is he a Carpet Bagger?

—The Milwaukee Wisconsin regards A. M. Tompson, editor of the Milwaukee Sentinel, as the leading candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor of Wisconsin. That Gov. Washburn will be renominated, it says, is conceded.

—Ex-Gov. Jenkins, of Georgia, has received the gold seal of the State voted him by the Legislature, and has written a letter in which he tells how much the State Treasurer, Secretary of State, and Controller General aided him in sharing the responsibilities, trials, and perils of his administration.

—The result of careful inquiry at Washington is that President Grant has not yet decided upon the selection of a Chief Justice. He will not make the appointment until it can be acted on by Senate, and meantime will endeavor to select a Chief Justice who will be acceptable to the entire country.

—The Cincinnati Enquirer is rather pleased with the idea of a third ticket. There has always been, it says, a doubt as to the strength of the Liberal party in Ohio. We are in a fair way for a census now. As the gentleman enumerate themselves we will know how much they are worth when they propose another bargain.

—Hon. Charles Francis Adams has acknowledged, in a letter to a Western man, the reception of a card containing what is denominated a platform of the Farmers' and People's Anti-Monopoly party of Livingston county, and says: "I see a little to object to and a good deal to approve. But at this day it is not profession that is so much wanted a practice."

—The unusually small decrease of the National debt during the months of July, amounting to $370,00 is chiefly owing to the large disbursements incident to the opening of the fiscal year. During the previous months of Secretary Richardson's term the average decrease has been about two million dollars. The accounts also show a decline of seven millions in the amount of bullion on hand.

—The Cincinnati Enquirer does not see any necessity for a new party in Ohio. And speaking of the Allen county "movement," it says: "That call was signed under the impression that a majority of the stockholders in the Democratic Company were anxious or willing to do business under a new name, which is not the case. Not one of the signers is anxious or willing to destroy the Democrotic party. Not one of them but is likely heartily to co-operate with it this fall."

—The howls of the free trade organs fall upon careless ears. Nine out of every ten readers glance at the dead line of an anti-protection phillipic and pass it by with the remark that they have had enough of that. Altogether the free trade movement, which two years ago was so rank and aggressive, is in a bad way. Its treasury is exhausted, its orators are hushed, its pamphlets and organs, franked with the signatures of Congressmen, no longer encumber the mails. Prof. Perry no longer prances over the country during his summer vacations preaching the true gospel of death to the tariff. The great dailies may as well save their powder and let free trade die out of politics. They cannot make a national issue of it nor build upon the trivialties of Grosvenor, or the figures of David Wells, the foundation of a new party. The people have long ago decided to let well enough alone.

GOOD AND BAD POLITICS.

Politics, in its higher and nobler sense is a subject in which we all have a direct personal interest, and consequently is one which claims a share of our attention. By politics in this sense, we mean that department of ethics which has to do with the safety, peace and prosperity of the republic; or in other words, we mean the science of human government. In a country like ours where all government is subject to the will of the paople, it is important that every young man should study to make himself acquainted with its fundamental principles. Without this knowledge no man can expect to vote intelligently, and is liable at any time to become the dupe of scheming and dishonest men.

In entering upon this study a young man should be governed by the same motives which prompt him to acquire a knowledge of grammar, philosophy, chemistry or any other of the numerous branches of useful knowledge. His object should be to make himself thoroughly acquainted with the resources of the country, the proper means of maintaining its safety, to understand its rights against foreign control or conquest, the protection of its citizens, and the preservation and improvement of their morals. A person who obtains this knowledge becomes an intelligent elector, and will never prostitute the sacred right of suffrage to any unholy purposes. When such a one is elevated to office the chances are that he will perform its duties creditably, because understandingly, and through him the republic will receive no detriment. It was this kind of politics which our forefathers studied and practised, and which gave prominence to their deeds and immortality to their lives: such politics is closely allied to patriotism, and is always associated with it. There is a politics without patriotism but this is politics in its bad sence. It may bear a certain resemblance to the genuine, but it is only that which the base imitations bear the pure gold. It needs only to be tested to disclose its spurious character. How many mere politicians sprang to arms in the hour of our nations recent peril? Only a precious few; and how few of our country's late defenders are now engaged in the base intrigues which disgrace our political annals. We therefore earnestly advise every young man to eschew that bad politics, which has only to do with the management of cliques or rings. It is synonymous with trickery and deceit. As a profession it is the most dishonorable, and as a means of livelihood, the most precarious. Compared with it the wood sawyer's trade becomes elevating, and farm labor glorious. There is something intensely bewitching in the excitement and whirlpool of a political campaign, and this is what attracts many of our young men to engage in it even sometimes at the expense of a good name, which is more to be valued than fine gold. Let every young man remember that no lasting distinction can be gained except by the most upright, honorable and manly course, that the names of such puny politicians will be forgotten while the names of such men as William Harris, Bond Valentine, James Linn, and H. N. McAllister will long be remembered by a grateful people, for the good they have done their fellow men, for the beautiful example of a life filled full with good deeds. These men were not politicians but they ever sought to walk in the path where duty lies. The extension of the commercial spirit into politics has done much to vitiate it. In the early days of the republic there was a laudable ambition to excel in true statemanship. Now an office seems by a great many to be valued only for the opportunities it affords of making a fortune, and the means for obtaining it have grown correspondingly unscrupulous and corrupt. A seat in Congress at the present time, if used according to its opportunities will make a man rich. Hence the herculean efforts of some men to secure a seat in Congress, and once secured to retain it as long as possible. Monopolies have always been corrupting; but monopolies were never so numerous nor so powerful as now. For several years the tendency has been to consolidate and form gigantic corporations, and these corporations exert such an influence in shaping the course of legislation, that there is danger of their becoming more powerful than the government itself.

Men were always tenacious of office, but they are growing more venal, and this venality extends even to the polls and establishes the commercial value of votes. If this thing is allowed to go on, we may soon expect to see a public political exchange with daily quotations of the price of votes in our annual elections, and the cost of procuring the passage of measures through our state and national legislatures.

The lobby system which is now practised upon state legislatures and the national Congress, might with very little change, be converted into a public brokerage system, and the whole business of legislation be conducted from a commercial stand point. This spirit seems to be widely diffused throughout the conntry, while questions of mere public honor and integrity are of secondary importance to the money profits of an election to office, or the passage of a measure through the legislature.

The business aspect of any great public measure has little or nothing to do with its moral or civilizing tendencies. The Pennsylvania or the Bald Eagle Valley Rail Road is one thing to the traveling public, but quite another thing in the stock market. In our late civil war, it was one thing to raise recruits to subdue the rebellion, but quite another thing to get government contracts and deal in paper substitutes; the former is the patriotic aspect, the latter the commercial one. Government hardly passes a single measure which does not arouse the commercial spirit and awaken the ingenuity of business men to use it as a means of personal aggrandizement or of personal gains. The remedy for this state of thing is to return to first principles; to cultivate true patriotism among the people. We must get back to the times when pure love of country shall not be sneered at as sentimental folly. We must bring forward and vote only for such men as we believe to be honest and patriotic. We must judge men by what they do rather than by their pretentions. We must put a stop to the brokerage in votes and to the commercial spirit in legislation. We must refuse to be led by men who make bad politics a profession, and cause the business of brokerage in votes, small wire pulling and party engineering, to become so low and reproachful that they will be glad to abandon it.

And while we give these ideas a general application and apply them to state and national politics let us not forget to follow the Watchman's suggestions and bring them nearer home and apply them to our county politics and politicians. Centre County unfortunately is burdened with one of the most corrupt rings, which is led by one of the most intriguing and unscrupulous of small wire pullers that ever brought disgrace upon an intelligent community, and notwithstanding his Chambers letters, his legislative corruption, his intrigue to secure the establishment of a so called Republican paper to be paid for by county advertising, his using his influence over the Court House Brigade last Spring to secure the publication of the registry act which the law does not require, not only in his own paper but also in Mrs. Brown's thereby bringing extra unnecessary expense upon the county, notwithstanding all this, wherever he points the democracy of this county go. Is it not time that we sought to purify our county politics by electing only good men to office who would not be led or influenced by unprincipled men?

—The Lewistown True Democrat announces, in advance, that it will not support Dr. Mitchell, if nominated for Senator, because he is a "rooster." It will support Petriken, if it has to, but reluctantly.

—German is hereafter to be regularly taught as a part of the common school course in Titusville.

LETTER FROM WASHINGTON.

[Correspondence of the REPUBLICAN.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 2, 1873.

OFFICIAL CORRUPTION.

Every patriot, every lover of his race, and every truly honest man, be he Republican, Democrat, or Liberal, is opposed to official corruption. I think it would not be far from the truth to say every man in this broad land is, at heart, opposed to filling our positions of public trust and honor with men who would steal. No one can wish for all men to be theives and scoundrels. On the contrary, every reflecting man must wish from the bottom of his heart that his fellow beings were all upright and pure. Every thinking person knows that if such were the fact, this life would be a paradise as compared with the present "struggle for existence," in which nine out of every ten in the business world will get the best end of the bargain in a trade if they can. We are all more or less selfish; and although in theory we beleive in justice, truth and right, we all come short of acting up to our best convictions.

This selfish principle within us renders us liable to temptation, and in our anxiety to swim safely over the waves of fortune we forget that we are crowding other souls down into the depths of poverty and wretchedness. We are almost sure to discover this disposition in others before we see it in ourselves. We are slow to recognize and acknowledge our own faults. It is in that class who in some way represent our own interests that we discover such faults most readily. Hence, it is that government officials, who represent the interests of all, become the target to all. Their deeds, exposed to public view, become so prominent, if bad, we are apt to forget the many who are similarly disposed in our own community in private life.

A few mistakes in the popular selection of official corruption, almost invariable suggest the propriety of organizing a new political party in which none but pure minded men are to be selected for office, and each party in its turn finds its ranks polluted with vicious recruits hungry for a place in the public service. Is it not about time for us to learn that honest officials are not made to order by political machinery? Is it not manifast that if we want honest public servants, the honest citizens at home must be prominent among the choosers? What can we expect in the way of reform so long as our primary meetings are controlled, as they almost invariably are by a little knot of professional office seekers? No change of party names, no amount of professions, no well worded platforms, are ever going to remedy these evils so long as the solid masses of the country are not part and parcel of the actual machinery as well as the source of power in our politics.

We must cultivate a higher sence of honor in our private retations if we would witness the same in public life. So long as we make the Goulds, Fisks and the Vanderbilts the subjects of flattery and distinction in private life we may expect to see such characters in high places officially. But when we learn to frown dishonesty, injustice and corruption out of existance in our home circles, it will require no New Departures and Fusions of political parties to insure purity, patriotism and honor in the public service. One of the most powerful means of improvement in these particulars, so far as united public action is concerned, is to be found in our public schools. They are doing much, but not half what they may do. We must recollect that education does not consist simply in going through text-books and committing to memory a few abstract principals and facts, but that properly considered it is a large portion of the business of life. We should be constantly learning, ever progressing, always acquiring more of truth.

Now, the love of education is the great want in early youth. The cultivation of this must begin at home and be carried on throughout life. Everybody is a teacher whether he knows it or nor, and so sure as each atom of matter exerts a power in the universe, so sure is it that each individual is a power either for good or bad in this world. We shall do well then to remember that reform is not to be expected from such special movement as small party conventions and platforms. Reform must begin at home, and when we can get men to be honest in their private dealings, when we can get our little village, township, county, city and state governments to work harmoniously and satisfactorily, then may we look for such results upon a larger scale, and not before.

SENATOR MORTON AND A NEW AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

A subject was agitated during the last session of Congress which bids fair to be the theme of much discussion in the immediate future. I refer to the proposed amendment of the Constitution altering the mode of electing the President and Vice President. It will be remembered that last winter Senator Morton presented a bill embodying a plan which obviated many of the objections to the present system, and supported it by a long and able argument. After some discussion the subject was refered to the Senate Commitee on Privileges and elections, of which he is chairman. The Senaror will give much time and thought to the matter during the vacation, and will endeaver to give it a close and thorough investigation. For this purpose he came to Washington the other day, that he might have access to the Congressional Library and to some unprinted records of Congress. Since the adjournment he has spent some time at the hot springs of Arkansas, where his health has been greatly benefitted. Those who visited the Senate galleries last winter and noted the pallid countenance and feeble movements of the Senator from Indianna would hardly recognize him now. The beaming face, flashing eyes, and vigorous motion betoken a return to health, which will gratify not only his friends but the country generally.

Mr. Morton intends to make a complete and extended report, going back to the very beginning, when our government was organized. He will review the debate that took place in the constitutional convention in 1787, and show that the imperfections of the present method were pointed out at that time by some of the best minds then present. Among others Fanklin urged that so important a question should be submitted directly to the people, and deprecated the distrust that led the conservative members of the convention to fear that they had already given too much political power to the people.

The Senator's own plan is to divide the States into districts having an equal population and contiguous to each other, and give to each district one vote for President and Vice President. This plan he prefers to the proposed plan of giving to every voter an opportunity to vote directly. He thinks it would add force to the wishes of contiguous communities having common interes tsand at the same time remove the exceptional features to the Electoral College. The subject is an important one, calling for the most thoughtful consideration on the the part of the people and those whom they delegate to make their laws, but it is thought that Congress will be slow to act upon it. Senator Morton will do all in his power to advance the measure during the next session of Congress.

A LITTLE ITEM OF NEWS RECENTLY RECEIVED BY ATLANTIC CABLE

may serve "to point a moral" for the benefit of a portion of the press of this country. In the British Parliament the other day a motion was made to increase the annuity of the Duke of Edinburg to £25,000 in view of his approaching marriage with the Grand Duchess of Russia. And for what valuable services is this munificent salary of $125,000 the recompense? For none at all; but because he happens to be the Queen's son he must be provided with an income two and a half times the salary of the Chief Magistrate of the nation. But what an outcry was raised last spring by the opposition press over the action of Congress in raising the President's salary to $50,000. We were treated to tirades upon extravagance of the party in power, the departure from republican simplicity, etc., etc. The absurdity of all this fault-finding is so manifest as to render any defence of the measure unnecessary. A party that is driven to resort to such expedients must be in a desperate situation.

Such incidents impress one afresh with the costliness of monarchial governments. A royal family is a very expensive luxury indeed, and one for which we have little desire in this country. Though at times a little given to grumbling over the taxes and the state of the finances, if we will but for a moment contrast the condition with any other nation under the Sun, we shall see great reason for self-congratulation.

had among its elements the ring of true metal. Colonel Hughes, the nominee for Governer of the State, in his address to the convention uttered some noble sentiments that should be cherished and remembered by us all. He says; "Our great party does right to cultivate sentiments of effectionate reverence for the nation of which we are part. The nation is not a machine contrived by human invention to be remodeled and taken apart according to the caprices of men. As children of the nation our fellow-citizens of all classes and localities are our brethern in the bonds of a common Christian loyalty; and all races and sections of a vast continent are harmonized on the filial basis of a common patriotism."

I have no knowledge of Colone Hughes personally, but if I were called upon to vote for him for Govoner of Virginia or to vote for some other equally unknown candidate who had said nothing, the language in which he has expressed his estimate of the nation would carry my vote in his favor. It is to be hoped that the spirit of progress so strongly manifested in this convention will continue to spread until it shall cause the old Commonwealth of Virginia to eclipse the glory of he former history.

STATE NEWS.

—Alex. Lockman was found in a barn in Dudley, Huntingdon county, the other day with life gone. His wife is suspected of having brought about his death.

—Mifflin township, Cumberland county, claims a woman who can swing a grain cradle from morning until night, while her husband rakes and binds the grain.

—Judge Wm. S. Reddin, one of the oldest Free Masons in Luzerne county, died on Tuesday of last week at Pittston. He was a soldier under Wellington at Waterloo.

—A boy named Ammond in Perry township, Greene county, was bitten on the hand by a potato bug and will probably have to have his arm amputated in consequence.

—A cow that gives buttermilk is reported from Forest county. Her owner is looking for another of the same breed on the principle that one good churn deserves another.

—The corporators of the Brownsville and Youghiogheny Railroad will meet at Brownsville on Tuesday, August 8th, to open the books for subscription for the stock of the said road.

—There is a man living near Beallville, Washington county, named James Decms, who is one hundred and seven years old, and lives on the farm he settled during the revolutionary war.

—On Wednesday evening Mr. Aug. Ginter, while engaged building an abutment for Messrs. Miller & Reinhart, contractars on the Tyrone and Lewisburg railroad, was struck by a stone which fell from a derrick and was instantly killed.

—On Friday a tax collector and constable of Scranton proceeded to the house of Geo. Eisenhart with the intention of seizing the furniture for taxes. Mrs. Eisenhart was at home, and seizing a coal shovel and a poker drove the intruders away.

—The Hollidaysburg Register says: A family of five—father, mother and three children, the youngest eight months, and the oldest eight years—that came from Germany, and settled at Bennington Furnace, this county, on the 4th of July, mysteriously disappeared on the night of the 21st instant, leaving the house open, and all their goods and clothes in it, and also money due them from the Company.

—The Allentown Chronicle says: "Yesterday afternoon a man named Fox, employed in the Catasauqua Rolling Mill, was overseeing the work of a green hand, and the latter making some mistake, Fox picked up a sledge hammer and struck him on the head with it, crushing his skull. It is doubtful if the injured man will recover, and Fox is in custody.

—The Philadelphia Sunday Times says: "The Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad, in their new "Darby Improvement" line, laid two tracks with steel rails, one of English and one of American manufacture, so as to practically test their relative durability, side by side, and from present appearances the American rails seem to wear the best."

Poetry.

THE DEVIL OUTDONE.

Old Nick came up to the earth one day,
And into Washington wended his way,
And having some hours to spare for calls,
He thought he would visit our national halls.
On arriving there he crossed the sill
As discussion was hot on the Salary bill,

Now Old Nick, as everybody knows,
Has power to change both himself and clothes,
So, spying a Senator's vacant chair,
Presto, change! and he was there!
And he said, as his eyes o'er the assembly ran
'Wouldn't I make a splendid Congressman?'

The bill was read, and the devil sat there
Tilted back in his easy chair,
With no particular interest in it
Till there came a pause of about a minute;
And in a voice that was full of dread
The 'back-action, clause of the bill was read.

Old Nick sat up, with interest new,
To see what the honorable (?) body would do.
'For surely,' said he, 'they havn't sunk so low,
That they can press that bill clear through:
It surely must be some hideous joke,
Or my imps have overdone their work.'

The bill was read and the ayes were called,
And the devil sat there like one appalled;
For the basest thing which he ever saw
Was this wholesale theft under guise of law
'To look any further there is no use,
For of all mean things this beats the deuce.

'For thousands of years have I wandered 'round
Trying to see if there could be found
In the universe a lower level
Than that which is occupied by the devil!
My search was fruitless by sea and land
Till I met an American Congressman.

'If men like those are to Congress sent,
I'll run my chances for President,'
Old Nick left town that very day,
But he was heard to mutter as he passed away:
I'll let that Forty-second alone,
For if I don't they'll steal my throne!

HENRI;

OR

THE WEB AND WOOF OF LIFE.

BY WILLIAM G. CAMBRIDGE.

CHAPTER XI.

AN OLD ENEMY.

When spring came, Helen and I often rambled in the woods and fields gathering flowers, and when weary resting under some beautiful shady tree. I never had been so happy before. I was with those who loved me, and whom I loved, in return, with all the warm ardor of my impetuous nature. I did not now live in the midst of jarring discords, but in beautiful harmony. I should have been quite happy, if it had not been for thoughts of home and the past. I knew that, while I was so richly blest, my brothers and sisters were miserable.

One summer evening, after a heavy thunder shower, Helen and I were taking one of our accustomed rambles, delighted with the thousand beautiful things which greeted us on every hand. It had not rained for many days before, and the earth was dry and parched with heat, the trees were dusty, and the air oppressive. After two hours' rain, what a change. The air was sweet and fresh, the leaves and grass clean and beautiful. The little rivulets, which had almost dried up, leaped forth again, seeking their old haunts among the flowers, laughing and singing as they went on their way. All nature looked refreshed and joyous, and the birds sang most sweetly their evening songs.

As we were walking along, drinking in the harmony and beauty so lavishly spread around us, we unexpectedly encountered the villain from whom I rescued Helen the first time ever I saw her. His looks showed that he had continued the downward course of sin; for his appearance was repulsive, and his whole aspect forbidding.

"Ha! my old friend, Mr. Eaton!" he said. "Glad to see you, boy. We have an account to settle, and

'Now's the day, and now's the hour.'

Come, my young gentleman, you may get ready for such a ——— licking as you never had before."

I expostulated, and Helen begged of him to go peacefully away, and allow us to do the same. He gave a coarse laugh, said that she was a beauty, and he liked her, and then made a most insulting and brutal proposal, as the only condition of my escape. This threw me into a violent passion, and my blood was up in a moment.

"You vile wretch, begone!" I cried, "or you will fare worse than you did before."

"I know it," he said, and he gave another brutal laugh, and sprang at me with tiger-like ferocity. After I had received one or two blows, and struck him as many, by a lucky hit I laid him at my feet. He arose quickly, somewhat weakened, and come at me once more, when I again knocked him down and sprang upon him; but as he promised better fashions, I desisted, and he arose and hastened away, frequently looking back, as though he was strongly inclined to try his hand once more.

I now turned to Helen, and she was deadly pale, and she gladly leaned on me for support. This was a diversion which we had not looked for, and which seemed inappropriate for the occasion. It interrupted a very pleasant train of thought and conversation,—severed a golden chain, which could not then be well reunited; so we turned our course towards home.

"You tremble, Helen," said I "but you need not fear."

"I was afraid you would be killed. Are you not badly hurt?"

"Not very,—just a little bruised, that's all."

"I hope we shall never see him again. How brutal he is!"

"He seems to be perfectly abandoned!"

"How strange that he should act so!"

"I did not know but that I should require your help, as of yore."

"I am glad you did not."

"Why so? Would it hurt your feelings to take a stone and pound his head?"

"Yes, very much. I don't think that I should have hurt him much."

"I suppose not, but you hit him hard, the other time."

"I know I did; but it would be difficult now."

"Well, Helen, I am glad it is so. I am sorry that I was obliged to strike him with such fury, but he would have it so. He won't care about another fight with me."

"But he may seek some means to be revenged upon you."

"I hope not for I do not wish him harm."

In due time we arrived at home; when it was found, on examination, that I had some superfluous bumps, but the skin was not broken, and I was not much injured.

We saw our foe after that under different circumstances, and learned his name and history. He was the only child of a Mr. Austin,—of whom the reader will learn more, by and by. At the time we saw him he was in prison, awaiting his trial for highway robbery and murder. He was convicted and executed. We visited him before and after his conviction, and then my enmity had ceased, and we did all that was in our power to smooth his pathway to the grave. He was melted by our kindness, and wished us to pardon him. When I told him that Helen was the little ragged girl who once lived with Deacon Webber, and whom I delivered out of his hands, he was greatly astonished. When we last saw him he looked very miserable, but said that he felt resigned to his fate, and trusted in the mercy of God. He was weeping when we bade him a final farewell, and clung to our hands, as though we had the power to save him. My interviews with him had a beneficial influence upon me, and I resolved to curb my passions, and keep them in their place.

During this time I frequently received letters from home, and things went on pretty much as they did before I left it. I will not pain the reader by relating the scenes which there transpired, but will close this chapter with a letter from brother Thomas. If there are expressions in Jane's or Thomas' letters which manifest a bad spirit, let the reader remember the circumstances by which they were surrounded. Circumstances will account for a lack of parental respect, and unchristian thoughts and allusions.

"I have a little bit of news for you, Henri, which, I think, will remind you of old times, and please you into the bargain. You know that we children formed the determination not to be drudges to the deacon, and I made bold, to tell him so. Some two months since he brought home a little girl, whom he took from the poor house in a neighboring town. She looked bad enough when she come; but the saintly deacon must make her look worse, if possible. Mrs. Stewart was sadly in his way; for she would be feeding and clothing her, making her garments out of old ones, and always keeping her looking tidy and decent. What a kind and charitable woman she is,—always doing good; Mrs. Stewart's care did not save the poor child from cruel abuse. If she did anything wrong, or the deacon imagined she had done wrong (and his imagination in that line is remarkably powerful), a brutal whipping was sure to follow. Mother thought the whippings were too severe, but he told her they were vitally requisite to the child's welfare. The fact is, he must have something to beat and mangle,—it is his nature, as much so as it is the nature of the wolf to bite. We determined, however, that this should not last long. The deacon liked it too well, and we knew what was sport to him was death to the child. A most brutal exhibition of his diabolical passion and cruelty decided us to put our plan into execution at once. Mary Flinn is awkward and clumsy. She had the misfortune to fall with a waiter of crockery, proving herself a decided 'piece-maker'—but one who did not receive a blessing to be coveted. The deacon was in the house at the time; and when he saw the broken dishes, he beat her fearfully. He cut and bruised her most shamefully. Mrs. Stewart, Jane and Lizzy, begged of him to stop; but it only inflamed the passions of this fiend still more. Mother interfered at last, and saved the poor thing from further outrage. If I had been there I know not what I should have done. It was well for the deacon that you were not present. Wouldn't there have been an uproar?

"I had corresponded with a friend who was in search of a little girl, and I wrote him in relation to the late horrible affair, requesting him to meet me at a given time and place, and take Mary home with him. She is now twenty-five miles from here, and has a good home. What a time we had, when the deacon learned that she was gone! His rage was beautiful. It would have done you good to have seen him. He threatened to turn us all out of doors; but the old interloper can't do it, and he knows it.

"I am happy to inform you that Hannah Webber is married. Hezekiah is to be married soon, and is to live on the old place. It would please me better if he would remove to his own place. Jane is engaged to a gentleman every way worthy of her. Mother's health is very poor,—she looks pale and miserable She stands in great fear of her charming husband, and I really believe despises him. Good! good!—don't you say so? I suppose my letter is sufficiently long: so, good-by. When the deacon is dead I will give you an invitation to come—home.

"THOMAS EATON."

CHAPTER XII.

WELCOME VISITORS — MRS. STEWART'S STORY.

Two years passed away, and I had not seen any of the members of our family, excepting my brothers. One summer afternoon, the stage stopped at the door of my uncle's, when out jumped Mrs. Stewart and my sister Jane. O, how glad I was to see them! I rushed into their arms, and kissed them again and again, with passionate delight. The joy seemed mutual. They expressed surprise in seeing me look so healthy, and remarked that I had grown very large and handsome. This flattery, or praise, sounded pleasantly enough in my ears! for, I am not ashamed to confess it, that I ever had a strong desire for true manly beauty. It is fashionable, I know, in the pulpit and out of it, to preach about the vanity of such things; and yet the preachers—both pulpit and lay—are as well pleased with the flattering words which sometimes greet their ears, as the bright-eyed blooming girl whom everybody styles the beauty of her native village.

Mrs. Stewart looked more care-worn than I had ever seen her before, while sister Jane had grown more interesting, but over her face passed frequently an, expression of sadness, reminding one of a spring day, when the clouds ever and anon pass over the face of the sun, hiding its beaming smiles, which makes the world look so glad and golden. But, nevertheless, her appearance was decidedly interesting. You could read in her aspect the dear, good hearted girl, whose presence would always cause more sunshine than shadow.

Helen was absent when they arrived; she came home soon after, and I was proud to introduce her as the one I had rescued from Deacon Webber's tyranny. Mrs. Stewart started when she took her hand and gazed into her beautiful face, which at that moment brightened with child-like reverence and admiration. I wished myself in their places, when she and Jane pressed her to their hearts, and imprinted warm kisses upon her red lips. A strong friendship immediately sprang up between the parties, which was a source of happiness to us all. I felt proud of my sister, who was a number of years Helen's senior, when I saw how well they loved each other. Many pleasant rambles did we enjoy during their fortnight's visit, and the time passed rapidly and pleasantly away.

They gave us a history of home affairs which had undergone no improvement since I left. It was interesting, but sad, Little Katy was still the same dear, affectionate creature, though her father had used every means in his power to spoil her. His treatment of her had been such that there was no living being she feared as much. He frequently commanded her to bring something to him—some article which he might or might not want. She would have obeyed him with alacrity, if she had not been afraid of him; and because she did not, he would whip her, and make her still more fearful. She must be trained, he said, and disciplined when young, or she would be ruined for this world and for the next. When abused by her father, she would ever fly to Mrs. Stewart, from whom she received so much sympathy and kindness that the evil effect of her father's brutal treatment was, in a measure, neutralized.

Finally, the deacon, after correcting her, would shut her up, lest she should run to Mrs. Stewart, and the good effects of her chastisement be destroyed.

"Poor little Katy!" said Jane; "doomed to be brutalized or die. Such abuse is too much for a sensitive, gentle creature, like her."

This brutality, to an affectionate little child, was almost enough to break the heart of Mrs. Stewart. The deacon thought it best not to interfere with my brothers and sisters in any other way than by fretting and scolding. My mother, who brought the great evil upon herself and children, was every day becoming more sickly and sad. She wished, by this time,—so thought Mrs. Stewart,—that she had harked to their warnings. I felt, as I listened, that she was to be pitied, doomed to spend her life with such a detestable wretch.

Uncle took his carriage, and carried Mrs. Stewart and sister Jane home, and when he returned George and Charlotte came with him. While they were with us, we received a letter from Jane, stating that Deacon Webber had talked so insultingly to Mrs. Stewart, that she had left the house and was boarding in the neighborhood. Uncle and aunt, very much to my satisfaction, resolved to offer her a home. He returned with George and Charlotte, and brought back Mrs. Stewart. She was affected to tears at her whole hearted reception.

"Here," said my aunt, "you shall have a home as long as you live; and we will all try to make it a happy home."

"It is a happy home," said Helen, "always pleasant, always joyful."

"A paradise," I observed.

"With at least one angel in it, in your estimation," remarked my uncle.

"And two, in yours," I replied.

"Mrs. Stewart ought to be satisfied," said my aunt, "if your description is true. A happy, pleasant, joyful home,—a paradise with angels."

"I thank you all," she replied. "If poor little Katy were here, I should be very happy."

"Why did the old rascal turn you out of doors?" I inquired.

"Do not speak in that manner, Henri," said Mrs. Stewart. "It is wrong, even about your enemies."

"It is no more than the truth," I replied.

"But the truth is not to be spoken at all times," observed my uncle.

"Very true," replied Mrs. Stewart. "The deacon is the worst man I ever knew; but it is not well to call hard names. He was whipping Katy in an unmerciful manner, for a most trivial offense. I looked on until I could bear it no longer, when I snatched her up in my arms and ran to my room, shut the door, and locked it. The deacon followed, and threatened to burst it open if I did not unfasten it. After some parleying, I unlocked it, and he walked in. Little Katy clung to me, and he did not offer to touch her, but heaped upon me abuse without measure, and ended by informing me that my room in the house was more desirable than my company. Knowing that Jane would befriend Katy as much as I could I immediately left and went to one of the neighbors, where I remained until Mr. Eaton came after me.

"Poor little Katy! she will not trouble them many years. She is a delicate, sensitive child, and with such usage as she receives she cannot live long. How strange that a man should so abuse his own child."

"Not very strange," I remarked; "for persons like him must have somebody's child to abuse; and, as he is so very unfortunate in relation to those who are not his own, as a matter of course he must expend his cruelty upon his own children."

"I think he would like her better if she had more of the Webber in her," said Mrs. Stewart. "She is entirely different from his other children. They are rough, hard-hearted, brutal; but she is gentle and affectionate. I often held her to my heart, and thought of my lost Lelia. O! if the deacon would give her to me, to be all my own, the deep yearning in my heart for the lost one would be in a measure satisfied But that wound, I fear, will not be healed until I am laid in my grave."

Mrs. Stewart was here so overcome by her strong emotion that she burst into tears.

"Let the thought console you," said my aunt, "that you will meet the dear child in heaven."

"It does console me," she replied, "and I thank my God for the glorious hope."

We all responded amen, and Mrs. Stewart's face beamed with the smile of reconciliation.

A brief period now passed away, and not a word was spoken. I was the first to break the silence.

"You made me a promise long ago," I said, "to tell me the story of your husband and Lelia's death. Uncle, aunt and Helen, would all be glad to hear it; and, if it would not be asking too much, I wish you would tell it now."

"Not now, Henri," said my uncle. "You are not considerate at all. Better postpone it, Mrs. Stewart, and not harrow up your feelings again at present."

"It is a painful story," said Mrs. Stewart, "and really frightful. It is true that I have promised to tell it to Henri; and I would rather do it now, than to put it off any longer. When you have heard it, you will not be surprised that I sometimes weep."

She now sat some minutes, as if in deep thought, her head upon her hand, while we kept perfect silence. In due time she began her startling narrative.

"When I was twenty years old, I married Mr. Stewart, the man of my choice,—the only one I ever loved. I was not disappointed in him; for he loved me faithfully, and so our home was happy though humble. We both endeavored to do our whole duty, and our reward was peace and quiet happiness. We had but one child, and she was born four years after our marriage. O! what a sweet little girl she was, with the softest flaxen hair, and lips and cheeks as red as roses! How much I loved that gentle child!

"How welcome was her tender embrace, and how sweet the kiss which she often impressed upon my lips! Sweeter than music was her childish prattle to me, and brighter than sunshine her angel presence.

"My first great grief was when my husband died. It was a fearful blow; and I should have been stricken to the earth, if it had not been for my angle child. She was my support now, and more dear than ever. Alas! I was doomed to lose her, and in a most overwhelmingly crushing way to a mother's heart. Mr. Stewart had been dead only three months, when Lelia was lost to me forever in this world. I sent her to a neighbor's, on an errand, and she never returned. The alarm was quickly given and, though the whole neighborhood was aroused, and the woods searched over and over again, still she could not be found, and not a trace of her was discovered. My God! what were my feelings when I knew I must give up all hope! I prayed for death. In my terrible anguish, I felt as if to curse my Maker, hoping in his anger He might strike me dead.

Six months had passed away, and I had grown calm, and felt willing to drink the bitter cup which had been prepared for me. On such an evening as this, I sat alone in my little cottage, once so cheerful, now so dreary and lonely. As I sat listening to the moan of the winds, suddenly I saw the outlines of a man. I knew he could not have come in at the door, and I covered my eyes, quaking with fear. I had no light but what was emitted by a few coals that lay upon the hearth. When I uncovered my face, my husband stood before me, looking pale and sorrowful. I trembled violently, for I knew it was his ghost!

My blood run cold in my veins. I could not stir. I seemed glued to the chair and my eyes were fixed on his, and in vain I tried to turn them away. Although I was greatly frightened, I saw that he looked as if he wished to make known some important secret. He continued to gaze at me for some moments, when, laying his hand upon his heart, he vanished from my sight.

After his departure, I queried with myself whether I had been dreaming. But I knew I had not been asleep. I was as wide awake as ever I was, and I had seen James Stewart as plainly as I ever saw him in my life. My blood had almost frozen in my veins as I looked at him. It could not have been a dream. I sat some moments motionless as a stature. At last I shrieked and fainted. When I came out of my fainting fit, I was stiff and cold. I arose and staggered to my bed, crawled in, and soon fell asleep. The sun was high in the heavens when I awoke. I arose, and, after taking some refreshments, walked out to reflect on the fearful event of last evening.

Directly to the east of my cottage, hid behind a hill, was the house of Philip Austin, a man who, previous to my acquaintance, with my husband, had sought my hand in marriage. I rejected his suit at once, but he continued to urge for a number of months.

When my husband began to visit me, and he saw that I encouraged his attentions, he was furious. He cursed me in the bitterness of his heart, and swore he would not die without revenge. He was married soon after we were, and, I supposed, he had forgotten his oath. I had noticed that, for some time past, he had studiously avoided me. Only once had he entered my house since my husband's death. When my child was missing, no one manifested so much interest and zeal, seemingly, in trying to learn her fate, as he. I could not now keep him and his oath out of my mind. What could it mean? Had he revenged himself by murdering my child? I now recollected that he had watched with Mr. Stewart the night he died.

I walked in the direction of Austin's house, and soon saw him coming towards me. When he saw who I was he halted, as though disposed to turn back; then, as if ashamed of his cowardice, he came boldly forward, apparently as unconcerned as an innocent man. When we met, I looked him full in the face, as though I would read his soul. He quailed before me. His shrinking before the gaze of a timid woman emboldened me, and I said,

"Philip Austin! what have you done with my child?

What a change came over him, at these words! His dark eyes glared with fearful hate, and his face became black with fury. He foamed at the mouth, so great was his rage.

"By all the powers of hell!" he exclaimed "you shall pay dearly for this damnable charge!"

He sprang to the wall, and took off a stone, as though he would murder me on the spot. But it suddenly dropped from his hands, and he fell upon his knees, trembling with fear.

"O God!" he cried, 'all bloody, as when I killed her! Go away,—don't come near me! See! there is her father, looking as pale as when I gave him the poison!'

"He arose, quaking in every limb, and foamed and ground his teeth like a madman.

"Ha, ha!" he cried; 'they are coming nearer,—see them! Look at that head where I beat it! She is coming to lay it against my face. Away! Don't touch me! Mercy! Good God! Mercy! mercy! They are gone now. I did but dream. What did I say, Laura? I did not mean it. I—I was driven to frenzy by your words; but think no more of it. Ha! they are coming again! Keep them off! keep them off, for God's sake! O, Stewart! Stewart! forgive me. He points to you. Yes—yes—I will!—I will tell her all!"

"He now sank upon the gound from exhaustion, overcome with terror. When he had sufficiently recovered, he told his fearful story. He never allowed the thought of revenge to escape from him for a single moment. As my husband was dangerously ill, he thought it the best time to accomplish his purpose. To murder Mr. Stewart and escape suspicion, he proposed to watch with him when his recovery was considered doubtful. The doctor expected a change before morning. During the night he administered a deadly poison. Learning that I was happy with my child,—that she was a universal favorite,—he had decoyed her into the woods and killed her, and made her grave near the spot where he wrought the awful deed of blood. When he had finished his tale of horror, I turned from him with fearful loathing; but he begged me not to leave him.

"See! there they come again!" he cried. 'O, God! that bloody head! It is coming close to me! No, no! do not touch me! There, there! go away, child,—go away, now! Poor thing! will the blood never stop? Will it always gush out so? Laura! my God! No, no! God has forsaken me, long ago. Laura, do, do keep him off! Don't you see him? Tell him to go,—he will mind you!"

"Thus he raved on, the poor wretch, foaming with anguish the most terrible. Notwithstanding the evil he had wrought, me, I pitied him. I accompanied him home, and he immediately took his bed.—to leave it but once more. After lingering a few days in mortal agony, he died. O, how fearful it was for him, and how terrible it was for me! He told us, as well as he could, where he had buried her body; but we could never discover the spot. But no matter,—she is not there. O! if—if——"

She was now so overcome that she could go no further; but wept, and wrung her hands in agony. We all wept in sympathy, and Helen arose and went to her, and threw her arms around her neck, and said, while the glittering drops rolled down her cheeks.

"I will be your child,—your own dear child!"

"Then you are not to be our child any more," said my aunt, a good deal affected.

Helen now left Mrs. Stewart, and went to Aunt Eaton, and, embracing her fondly, said,

"I will be daughter to you both,—love you all, for you are all so good."

"Spoken like my own brave girl!" said Uncle Eaton. "You shall love Mrs. Stewart as much as you wish, and be a daughter to her, and we will not be jealous of your affection. She needs consolation more than we do, for she has lost all she had."

"And Henri," said Helen, "shall be your son," placing my hand in Mrs. Stewart's.

"I am happy to have you for a mother," I said. "I have often wished that you held that endearing relation to me; for I have always yearned for a mother's whole hearted love. I know that you love me; and I will always love you, and try to make you so happy that you will ever look forward with hope, and not backward with grief."

"That's right!" said my aunt; "and, in seeking to make her happy, you will fill your own cup with joy."

"I knew you would say so," remarked my uncle; "for you know by experience—it is the way to be happy in this world. Those who are so selfish that they never wish to do good to others, should not expect to taste the highest enjoyment. God has so ordered that those who strive, without selfishness, to help others, shall, at the same time, help themselves."

Mrs. Stewart embraced us both, and now shed tears of joy. "God bless you, my dear children!" she said, fervently; "and, with your love, I will try to forget the anguish and sorrows of the past."

We spent the remainder of the evening in pleasant and profitable conversation; and when I retired to my bed, that night, I felt that I had great reason to be thankful, in spite of the thick gloom which had hitherto enshrouded my life. O, that there were more faithful and loving hearts in this beautiful world of ours! Where truth and love dwell there is pure joy.

It is reported that in some parts of Illinois farmers were seen in a single day, about the middle of June, husking corn breaking stalks, plowing ground, planting corn, and cultivating corn six inches high, which may be called mixed husbandry.

HERE IS AN OPPORTUNITY FOR MAKING MONEY
RARELY PRESENTED IN A LIFETIME.

We have got the best and surest-selling article ever invented, that every housekeeper buys on sight. It is a small Furnace, weighing only six pounds, that can be used with or without a stove. It will fit in the holes of any sized stove or range, and it will do as much work with one quart of fuel—charcoal, chips, coke, corncobs, wood or soft coal—as can be done on any stove with one-half bushel. It will boil, broil, roast, toast, fry and stew. It is the best flat-iron heater in the world. Its economy in saving fuel is marvellous. You have no smoke, gas nor heat in the room. It sells the year round. Retail price only $2. Thousands are sold every week. Any man with a small capital can clear from $20 to $40 per day by owning the right of any good county, and a whole State is of incalculable worth to a man of enterprise. ELEGANT LITERATURE.

"CONTEMPTIBLE LIARS."

Republicans of Centre, what do you think of a paper started through Democratic influence, and paid for out of the county treasury. We know all about it and can tell more if necessary. —Tuten Republican.

As to the correctness of the statement that certain Democrats have pecuniarily aided in establishing Brown's paper, we plead total ignorance. If they did, that is a private matter entirely. But the other assertion in the above quotation that that paper "was paid for out of the county treasury," is a public matter, and, if true, should subject our county official to speedy punishment; and, if false, the people of this town (for the Republican has only a few readers outside of it), should know and mark the lying whelps who thus deliberately lie from both habit and a natural love for falsehoods

In the article from which we have taken this extract, there is not a solitary fact, or reference, or the shade of a shadow of respectable or unrespectable authority given, to prove the statement that Brown's paper "was paid for out of the county treasury." It is a base and brazen lie of one of the BEAVER Ring (we know him) of the Radical party, for the purpose of destroying Brown's Republican. How or when they demolished that paper we don't care a picayune. But they must not wilfully or malliciously lie away the good reputation of our efficient treasurer, or the undoubted integrity of our county commissioners. If either the dirty Yankee falsifiers of the TUTEN Republican, or their foulmouthed and contemptible informant have any information in their possession, showing that public money has been fraudulently taken from the county treasury, why do they not take it before a Justice of the peace and thus get it in shape for their conviction and punishment. Our court is upright—our juries honest. But they dare not utter their falsehood anywhere but in their lying Yankee sheet. It is simply bold falsification for party effect, and to gratify their spite on the commissioners for giving BROWN'S paper, last fall, a portion of the county printing. That is the animus of this malicious falsehood, and such is the character of the Yankee carpet-baggers who, being in the county six months, undertake to destroy the reputation of old, reliable and esteemed citizens by their contemptible and villainous falsehoods. Spot the buggers!—Watchman

Let us cull the various flowers from the above boquet and unite the scattered sweets into one concentrated fragrance: "Contemptible liars," "lying whelps," "deliberately lie," "a base and brazen lie," "wilfully and maliciously lie," "dirty Yankee falsifier," "foulmouthed and contemptible informant," "falsehoods," lying Yankee sheet," "bold falsification," "malicious falsehood," Yankee carpet baggers," "contemptible and villainous falsehoods," "buggers"—in less than half a column of leading editorial.

What a pity the writer of the above had not lived in ancient Greece, for he might have found congenial if not profitable employment as the teacher of THERSITES, whom the bard of Avon immortalized as the master of scurrility. With what exquisite pleasure must the patrons of the Watchman read such beautiful and chaste effusions to their wives and daughters?

But to the argument. We are accused of attempting to destroy the character of our efficient Treasurer. We are innocent of the charge, we never asserted or insinuated that Treasurer Weaver ever paid out a dollar of public funds except upon orders or warrants in due form drawn upon him. He cannot go behind an order to inquire whether it is properly or improperly issued. If the order is in due form and signed by the Commissioners, he must pay it if he has funds sufficient. We will be the last to make a gratuitous assault upon the character of a public officer against whom we have no evidence.

Whether our former article tended to impeach "the undoubted integrity of our County Commissioners," depends upon their knowledge of the real character of the transaction. What did we alledge: First, that P. Gray Meek, C. T. Alexander and R. M. Magee, three prominent Democratic politicians, endorsed the note of Mrs. W. W. Brown to raise funds to start a pretended Republican newspaper in Bellefonte, and that Mr. Meek purchased the material in his own name and rented it to Mrs. Brown. What reply is made to this?

"As to the correctness of the statement that certain Democrats have pecuniarily aided in establishing Brown's paper, we plead total ignorance, if they did, that is a private matter entirely."—Is this plea true? Certainly not. Mr. Meek cannot be ignorant as to whether our statement was or was not correct.—He must know whether he, with Alexander and Magee, endorsed Mrs. Brown's note for the purpose we stated. He must know whether he ordered the material which Brown uses, and rented it to Mrs. Brown. We did not state indefinitely that certain Democrats did this, but that Mr. Meek himself did, and he says he pleads total ignorance as to whether this is correct or not. Of course this is equivalent to admitting that our statement, in this respect at least, was true.

But he says "this was a private matter entirely." We do not care to inquire for whom these gentlemen endorse for private purposes. Had this note been for the support of Brown's family, the payment of his debts, or the starting him in any private enterprise, no one would have the right to inquire who his endorsers were, except the bank which discounted the paper. But when a public newspaper is started, ostensibly to advocate the principles and support the policy of a great political party, the public have the right to know whether such paper is started and kept up by men who desire those principles and that policy to prevail, or by the managers of the opposition party to distract the counsels and mar the harmony of the party it pretends to support. No one pretends that Brown had the means of his own to start a newspaper. Who furnished it to start him? Did any Republican? Some were invited to, but in every instance we have heard of, they declined the honor. Why did Meek, Alexander and Magee furnish funds or credit to start a Republican paper? Are they interested in the success of the Republican party? Did they desire Republican principles to be more generally advocated in Centre Co. than could be done through one newspaper? Were they willing to sacrifice their party interests to assist their very dear but unfortunate friend, Col. Brown?—On the other hand, did they not expect, by starting that paper, to create a schism in our party and thus benefit their own? If that was the purpose of starting that sheet, and the object for which they maintained it by a share of county patronage, is not the pretense that it is a Republican paper a fraud upon the public, which it was our duty to expose?

In the second place we alleged that this debt for which Meek, Alexander and Magee made themselves liable was paid (as far as it was paid at all) out of the county treasury. This has aroused the vengeful ire of the whole cabal. That no injustice may be done to any innocent persons we will be a little more specific. We aver that cotemporaneous with the contract by which Meek, Alexander and Magee become Mrs. Brown's endorsers there was an other contract by which certain considerable amount of printing or advertising was to be done by Brown for the County Commissioners and other democratic officials, the pay for which coming out of the county treasury was specifically pledged to the payment of the note endorsed by these democratic managers, and that in pursuance of this arrangement the election Proclamation and other advertising was going to Mrs. Brown's paper, and the money paid for the same out of the County Treasury was actually applied in payment of the note these democrats endorsed for Mrs Brown. If our county Commissioners were aware of this corresponding arrangement and knowingly performed their allotted share of it, they cannot complain if the public holds them responsible for it, if they were ignorant of the nature of the bargain made and were merely tools in the hands of shrewd and designing men in whom they may have had confidence, they could only be blamed for not having selected more honest and upright advisers. Railing in coarse language will not be accepted by the honest and intelligent people of this county, whether democrats or republicans, as a sufficient answer to the charge. The parties implicated may as well answer candidly, and if we have been misinformed as to any part of this affair we will willingly retract as soon as we are convinced of our error. While they are answering we will submit one or two additional points of inquiry. Did not (in addition to the assistance given Brown by Meek, Alexander and Magee) the democratic Clerk of the County Commissioners loan Brown a considerable sum of money, and did not Brown also pledge to him the proproceeds of the county advertising, in consequence of Meek's getting the proceeds of Brown's bill against the county is not the clerk still the creditor of Brown? Come, Uncle Billy, on honor now.

They have rightly named their establishment which is truly the source to which the people go for their drugs, and medicines and toilet articles of every description. Mr. Rankin is a pleasant agreeable gentleman and his stock of goods is unsurpassed this side of Philadelphia, and his close attention to his business, and courteous manner towards his customers has won him a position among the leading business men of our borough.

——The finest garden we have seen in Penns valley and indeed in Centre County is owned by J. C. Mortz, of Woodward. Mr. Mortz is a successful scientific gardener. A very cheap, convenient and profitable feature in his garden is a water tank elevated about twelve feet from the ground which is filled with water from the mountain, which supplies also the town of Woodward, and is remarkably soft and pure, and with which, with the aid of about 100 feet of hose he bids defiance in the driest weather. The virtue of this simple arrangement is manifested by the abundant crops and thrifty appearance of the garden. His tomatoes, cabbages and sweet potatoes are the farthest advances and most thrifty looking of any we have seen. The garden contains about ½ of an acre of ground and by this constant supply of fresh warm water will be made to produce as much as an ordinary garden of one acre and of the very best quality of produce. Mr. Mortz is a pleasant, genial gentleman and takes pleasure in showing his fine grounds to his friends and it is well worth the while to make a special journey to see his fine crops and convenient arrangements.

IT MESSRS STUART, PETERSON & CO'S Philadelphia Cooking Stove, the "Barley Sheaf" And this being the fact, it is no more than a natural consequence that the firm should be the recipients of so many high encomiums from so many different points. One of the most admirable qualities of the "Barley Sheaf" is in its ability as a baker; the oven doors being double tin lined, the heat is retained and diffused in such a manner that it bakes rapidly and thoroughly, and at the same time economizes in fuel to a remarkable degree. A number of very important additions have recently been made to the B S, among them a patent Anti Dust Shaking Sifter and an Anti Dust Shaking and Dumping Grate, the workings of which are fully described in the illustrated descriptive Circulars of the firm.

EUROPEAN CORRESPONDENCE.

THE WORLD'S EXHIBITION AND THE AMERICAN COMMISSION.

TO THE EDITOR OF REPUBLICAN: Sir:—In my last letter I mentioned that Messrs. William Sellars & Co., of Philadelphia, would secure a medal for their superior machinery, and I may add that Messrs. Park & Jones, of Pittsburg, will also take a medal for specimens of steel; another medal will go to Penn'a for best tanned leather, and I think that in two other departments exhibitors from Pennsylvania will secure medals, or at least honorable mention, the jurors not having, as yet, completed their awards.

It is said that the English jurors are not inclined to treat the American articles with liberal consideration, and that English exhibitors are somewhat jealous of the American productions; but in almost all cases of ultimate decisions the German jurors cast their votes with the Americans.

It is certainly, to every true American, a grand sight, and in which he will take pride, to see our country, not yet one hundred years old, gathering up of her products and laying them down here to compete for medals and honor with the productions of countries and kingdoms a thousand years old before ours was born. And as he looks he may note, in this race of competition, how much of that which is claimed to be entirely new, by the old countries, has had its counterpart, if not its origin, in the United States. In fact there are European exhibitors who have had the audacity to present here for competition and medal, inventions that had their origin in the United States years ago, without an admission or recognition of the fact. One special illustration I may cite: An iron company of Belgium exhibit a wrought iron compound column which have been in use by the Phoenix Iron Company of Philadelphia, and by the Keystone Bridge Company, of Pittsburg, for a number of years for the construction of bridges, depot buildings, etc., and which is an American invention, and has been patented in European countries. There are many cases that I might cite, wherein the idea or invention is purely American, but with certain modifications it is made to appear to belong to other countries. It seems to me that much of the duty of a Comsioner should be to point these out, to separate the new from the old, and to report upon what is entirely new and valuable to our country and people, and that men competent for that work in every department of the exhibition should have been commissioned to come here, and none others, but alas! what is the result?

The unwritten history of the American Commission to the Vienna Exposition will, no doubt, ever be the most interesting, for it will never all be told.—The scheme for the Commission originated with the Union League Club of New York, and the intention of the parents was that their offspring should contribute to their glory—financial, social and political—even if the interests of the exhibition should go for it. Congress modified the plan, the President and the Secretary of State both refused to confirm the whole scheme, but still there remained to the originators much of their plans unmolested. The present Minister to Austria had been President of the Union League Club, the Chief Commissioner, Mr. Vanburen, was of that ilk, and his first chosen assistants were there nominated—such as McElrath, etc., and the result was a family feud. Vanburen, who, perhaps, from want of administrative ability, and lacking other qualities of fitness, should never have been appointed, was superceded, and his whole corps of assistants, many of them most worthy gentlemen, suspended, and everything in connection with the American department of the Exposition thrown into unutterable confusion. McElrath, one of the suspended Commissioners, and Mr. Canon, of the Union League Club of New York, were placed in charge, temporarily, until Mr. Schultz, of the same Club, could be persuaded to take charge. His term of office was also short, for he too lacked many qualities of fitness which would be apparent when he came to grapple with departments of Science, for he is neither more nor less than a worthy gentleman, of not over liberal education, quite energetic, and I believe successful in a department of business to which he has devoted time and means—tanning. We are now under the administration of Mr. Garretson of Ohio.—Whether the charge against Mr. Vanburen of malfeasance in office be true or not, I have not the means of knowing, but the general feeling here seems to be that he is really more sinned against than sinning. There is no doubt that, clothed with a little brief authority, he did cut such fantastic tricks that at least made Mr. Jay weep, and if the angels did not have spleens to laugh, it is certain that representatives from other countries did.

The scandal in connection with the commission, and the fear of congressional investigation, has kept many of the honorary Commissioners away, and prevented some who have appeared from reporting for duty, and the result, in the matter of work, to our country can hardly be satisfactory.

While other countries have sent here only of their best men, it is a lamentable fact that some of the American commission can speak neither German, French nor ENGLISH, while, by the commission, men are appointed to write on departments or class, not from what they know on the subjects, but because, forsooth, they wish to learn. Such, I am assured, was the explanation made by the gentleman who will write up the Iron Department.

Surprise was manifested at home at the number of Commissioners sent.—Russia has sent three times as many, but every one sent from that country will be required to report to the Commission and the Commission to the several departments of the government and to certain scientific institutions.

The Legislature of Penna. authorized the Governor to commission three Commissioners, who are, I believe, to receive from the State Treasury several thousand dollars for services. Their report will, therefore, no doubt, be looked to with great interest. Up to the present time they have not reported here, and some concern is manifested as to their whereabouts. Can it be possible that they have lost their way?

Not since the dispersion of the tribes at the building of the tower, has there been heard such a babel of languages as we have here in Vienna. Austria, within her own dominions, supplies sixteen distinct languages and as many more dialects, while from the orient there comes as many more. The German takes precedence of all others and next comes French. The English-speaking peoples have no general place of meeting, and that language is not much heard except at the hotels.

It is quite certain that the number of visitors to the exhibition falls far below expectation, which is made more painfully apparent by the large proportions of the building and the grounds that already give omen of banquet halls deserted. The financial department of the whole affair will prove a stupendous failure in which the government of Austria will suffer severely but not alone.—If the loss could have been entailed upon the hotel proprietors, lodging houses, keepers, cab owners, porters, and the rest who put themselves vigilantly to work, from the start, to rob the visitors—for these are they who have kept the world away—there would have been rejoicing in the land. As it is, there is regret felt by every exhibiter and every

VOYAGER.

VIENNA, July 12, 1873.

On The Wing.—No 4.

In these hot summer days, we feel like taking a ramble in some distant corner and resting awhile from the busy cares of life. But being unable to do so in the flesh, we will use the imagination. And so we start on our rapid flight to old familiar scenes, and dwell a little while with the thin shadows of the past. We fly through the beautiful sceneny of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York, rich in the sacred recollections of the past; across the Sound, through busy Conneticut and Massachusets, up the beautiful Valley of the Merimac, past Manchester with her million spindles, past Concord, and in a few moments we find ourselves among the granite Mountains of New Hampshire. Traveling in this easy way, we make quick work of it. We feel fresh amid these old mountains capped with their stormy clouds, and covered with their perpetual verdue. Here we are in the old historic town of Salisburg. How varied are the productions of our country. While rambling in South Jersey and Delaware, Sweet potatoes and peaches seem the main reliance of the farmer.

In some counties of Pennsylvania Coal is the source of wealth, while in Mittany Valley iron ore aids in the acquisition of wealth. But up here in Salisburg, Wool is the chief source of income to the farmer. And the sheep are not the common, coarse wooled sheep, but the finest merino, the wool that sells highest in the market, and meets with ready sale. This branch of industry will become of vast importance to Western Pennsylvania when the lumber is used up, a time very near at hand. The mountainous portions of Pennsylvania are as well fitted to the raising of these sheep as the hills of New Hampshire and Vermont. They are small in body, easily kept, heavily fleeced, and thus afford a comparatively easy way of rearing one's bread in the rugged states of New England, where the soil is so broken up by mountain ranges. The question is now frequently suggested in Lock Haven, Williamsport and Clearfield;—What shall we do when our lumber is gone? The writer of this article was not long since, talking on this suciect with an ex-Governor of Pennsylvania, when he remarked "My farm is well adapted to wool raising, and I have thought the time had nearly come to begin." The mountains of New Hampshire are quite exhausted, and afford not the best of pasture. But the mountains of central and western Pennsylvania are easily cleared and will then afford the finest pasture for these "fine wooled Sheep."

Stern necessity will compel men to labor at some other employment than the one which now engages their attention. Thirty five years ago, the ground on which the city of Manchester stands was not worth a dollar an acre; now one of the most flourishing cities of New England stands there, where it never could have stood, but for the fall of a very few feet in the Merimac river. The West Branch of the Susquehanna, and Bald Eagle creek, afford equal facilities for establishing manufacturing centres, and building up cities and towns. Thus wool could be raised and find a ready market close at hand. Cotton can be brought here as easily as it can be taken to Manchester or Lowell, and the fabrics find as ready sale. The lumber taken out the valleys of the West Branch and its dependencies bring nearly 8,000,000 of dollars, annually and this must cease in a very few years, good judges say four or five years. Some other industry must take its place or population will change. Here in Salisburg John Smith keeps four or five hundred sheep which, if well kept, will yield an average of five or six pounds of the finest of wool, this, with the increase of the flock will afford a handsome income to the farmer. A very ordinary fence will keep them in bounds, and during the whole summer little care is needed. Manufactories are close at hand, where the wool is sold for cash. It is time for men of capital to look about them, and not allow New England to do all the wool raising and manufacturing for the country. This great range of mountains, from the gulf of St. Lawrence to Northern Georgia, is to become the manufacturing centre for the continent, and Pennsylvania is yet to build up cities and towns on her mountain streams, and the busy hum of machinery may yet be heard where her hundred beautiful waterfalls go dashing to the sea, all unemployed in their course.

But let us walk about town awhile, the farmers are every where busy gathering in their hay, much as they did eighty years ago, when Daniel Webster helped his father mow, and hung up his scythe in an apple tree on the farm by which we are passing. Here is the old mansion, the well, and the great elm with its grateful shade, under which the great statesman of America so frequently slacked his thirst. The father and mother quietly sleep on the banks of the Merimac about four miles from the old home, while their son Daniel sleeps as quietly in the eastern parts of Massachusetts, at Marshfield. A mile from the old home stead, the old school house where Daniel received his first lessons, still stands a monument of the past. It has been repaired but it is the same old building yet. On the hill at some distance stood the old Congregational church, in which the infant Daniel was baptised, having been carried there in the arms of his father on horseback. The church has been removed to the village and for many years the people of the old town have assembled for religious worship. A great story is told, (though true) of one of the old pastors. In those days gentleman wore buckskin breeches for winter wear. During the summer the breeches would be hung in the garret, and remain till cold weather in the Fall. In this way the good man had hung his breeches away, and in the cool of Autumn had taken, brushed them nicely, shaken out all the insects that might have gathered in during the summer. Dressed in his comfortable winter garb he went to the Sabbath service. The good man had passed through the introductory service, had begun the sermon and was warming up under the excitement of the occasion. The breeches had also become warm as well as the wasps that were left behind, and, irritated by the confinement, and fully restored to their native vigor, also commenced opperation. The good brother bore it as long as he could, and until forbearance ceased to be a virtue, when in the agony of the moment, he slapped the centre of pain so that the noise rang through the church, exclaiming;—"Brethren I have the spirit of the Lord in my mouth, but the Devil in my breeches!" Of course the text and sermon were forgotten amid the varied emotions excited by the ludicrous incident. But my eyes are now resting upon the grand old mountain, rising 3500 feet in the air, and frequently enveloped in clouds. This is Kearsarge, after which the gunboat was named that sunk the Alabama so quickly in the British channel. Our affection for the beautiful mountain is enhanced since that great battle which taught John Bull so good a lesson, and added such luster to the "Starry flag."

We feel like ascending this mountain once more and then coming home. Our teams are all ready, our lunch prepared, and off we start for the summet. After about six miles ride, we leave our teams, take our knap-sacks, and climb the rugged steep. We find a good spring near the top, and seated in the cool breeze, enjoy one of the grandest scenes upon which the eye can gaze. Yonder to the North rise the White mountains in solemn grandeur on the tops of which the busy thousands annually gather for recreation and health. Far in the interior of Maine rises Mt. Katachin 5885 feet; toward the Northwest, the Green Mountains of Vermont skirt the horizon. In the east Mass. is seen in hill and dale. All over this scene are beautiful lakes reflecting the rays of the Summer sun. We are seventy miles from the sea, yet the broad Atlantic is before us, as far as the eye can reach. With the aid of a good glass, ships are seen carrying their happy inmates to the ends of the earth. But it is now three o'clock, and we must start for home, or darkness will overtake us.

ALPHA.

TEA CAKE.—Take one-and-a-half cups white sugar, one-and-a-quarter cups sweet milk, one-quarter cup of butter, two eggs, well beaten, one-half teaspoonfull salt, flavor to taste, and two-and-a-half cups flour, having in it one measure of Banner Baking Powder.

Each can of the Banner Baking Powder contains a small measure, to be used even full, according to printed directions. If you cannot obtain this really valuable article from your grocer, send twenty five cents by mail, addressed to Banner Baking Powder, P. O. Lock Box, 317, Pittsburg Pa., and you will receive, postage paid, a quarter pound package, together with a list of fifty valuable Receipes.

FOR LOSS OF APPETITE, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Depression of Spirits & General Debility, in their various forms, ERRRO-PHOSPHATED ELIXIR of CALISAYA made by CASWELL, HAZARD & CO., New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best tonic. As a stimulant tonic for patents recovering from fever or other sickness, it has no equal. If taken during the season it prevents fever and ague and other intermittent fevers.

Centaur Liniment.

There is no pain which the Centaur Liniment will not relieve, no swelling it will not subdue and no lameness which it will not cure. This is strong language, but it is true. Where the parts are not gone, its effects are marvelous. It has produced more cures of rheumatism, neuralgia, lock-jaw, palsy, sprains, swellings, caked-breasts, scalds, burns, salt-rheum, earache, &c., upon the human frame, and of strains spavin, galls, &c., upon animals in one year than have all other pretended remedies since the world began. It is a counter-irritant, an all-healing pain reliever. Cripples throw away their crutches, the lame walk, poisonous bites are endered harmless, and the wounded are healed without a scar. It is no humbug. The recipe is published around each bottle. It is selling as no article ever before sold, and it sells because it does just what it pretends to do. Those who now suffer from rheumatism, pain or swelling, deserve to suffer if they will not use Centaur Liniment. More than 1000 certificates of remarkable cures, including frozen limbs, chronic rheumatism, gout, running tumors, &c., have been received. We will send a circular containing certificates, the recipe, &c., gratis, to any one requesting it. One bottle of the yellow wrapper Centaur Liniment is worth one hundred dollars for spavined or sweenied horses and mules, or for screw-worm in sheep. Stock-owners—this liniment is worth your attention. No family should be without Centaur Liniment. Price, 50c. a bottle, large bottles $1. 00. J. B. ROSE & Co., 53 Broadway, New York.

CASTORIA is more than a substitute for Castor Oil. It is the only safe article in existence which is certain to assimilate the food, regulate the bowels, cure wind-colic and produce natural sleep. It contains neither minerals, morphine or alcohol, and is pleasant to take. Children need not cry and mothers may rest.

MAGAZINS.

A Jolly, Good Book.

OUR DIGESTION: or, MY JOLLY FRIEND'S SECRET, by Dio Lewis, A. M., M. D., author of "Our Girls," etc., etc..

It is a real pleasure to get hold occasionally, of a plain, practisal common-sense book, that bears on its every page as the evident design of its author, the good of his fellow-man (and woman, too). Nhree-fourths of all the sickness and unhappiness in our midst has a weak digestion for its prime cause. This being a self-evident fact, our only wonder is that a book like "Our Digestion" has not been written long ago. Now that it has been done, we are glad it has been so well done, and by so popular, practical and jolly a man as our friend Dio Lewis. Search the country over, and you cannot find a man botter suited for the task. His admirers are numbered by thousands, and all will welcome gladly a new book from his delightful pen.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

BLOOD PURIFIER

Is the most powerful cleanser, strengthener and remover of Glandular Obstructions known to Materia Medica.

It is specially adapted to constitutions "worn down" and debilitated by the warm weather of Spring and Summer, when the blood is not in active circulation, consequently gathering impurities from sluggishness and imperfect action of the secretive organs, and is manifested by Tumors, Eruptions, Blotches, Boils, Pustules, Scrofula, &c., &c.

When weary and languid from overwork, and dullness, drowsiness and inertia take place of energy and vigor the system needs a Tonic to build it up and help the Vital Forces to regain their recuperative power.

In the heat of Summer, frequently the Liver and Spleen do not properly perform their functions; the Uterine and Urinary Organs are inactive, producing weakness of the stomach and intestines and a predisposition to billious derangement.

DR. WELLS'
EXTRACT OF JERUBEBA

is prepared directly from the SOUTH AMERICAN PLANT, and is peculiarly suited to all these difficulties; it will cleanse the VITIATED BLOOD, strengthening the LIFE-GIVING POWERS, and REMOVE ALL OBSTRUCTIONS from IMPAIRED AND ENFEEBLED ORGANS.

It should be freely taken, as Jerubeba is pronounced by medical writers the most efficient PURIFIER, TONIC and DEOBSTRUENT known in the whole range of medicinal plants.

A WOMAN'S DREAM.

"Wilt thou begin thy life again,
O woman of the whitening hair?
Become a child, with shining train
Of angle-children in the air?
Wilt feel thy mother's kisses press
Those cradled warmly at her feet?"
"What! find my vanished Eden? Yes,
Ah, yes, my God! It was so sweet!"

"Wilt thou in blissful faith resume
Thy sire's fond shelter as of old,
While breathing innocent perfume,
The white flowers of thy heart unfold?
Back to thy vernel happiness,
Fly like a bird on pinions fleet?"
"Might but that joy continue—yes,
Ah, yes, my God! It was so sweet!"

"Wilt thou unlearn thy sorry lore,
And shyly keep life's leaves between,
And, feeding youngest hopes once more,
Forget the winters thou hast seen?
The dashed bank, the dove of peace,
The morning freshness, round thy track;
Shall these return?" "My God! ah yes!
All but the wayside graves give back!"

"Have, then, thy wish! Thy steps retrace!
Flowers, perfume, song, be thine once more!
Yet shall time lead thee to the place
Of tears as surely as before.
Rekindle Passion's fires, and view
Their ever-baleful radiance!"
"What! light those earth-born flames anew?
Ah, no, my Savior! Take me hence!"

Agricultural.

NOTE.—We earnestly desire that this Department of our paper shall be made as useful as possible to our Agricultural friends, and therefore extend a cordial invitation to all parties interested, to favor us with contributions. Individuals who have made useful experiments and yet do not feel competent to write them out in form for publication, if they will favor us with the results we will take pleasure in putting them in proper shape.

To the Editor of Republican.

Sir.—In your last number you asked for contributions to your agricultural department. I do not know as what I am about to write will be exactly appropriate under that head but if you think it worthy a place anywhere in your paper you are at liberty to use it, if not consign it to the waste basket. It is now Saturday evening. Husband sits reading; our little girl is putting away her family of dolls—telling them they must be good until Monday. I have been resting and thinking for the last half hour—thinking of tired mothers, who now sit down and review in their minds the work of the past week. Yes, washing, ironing, mending, cooking, and the dozen and one cares of the week, are now the things of the past. To look forward to the week's work—knowing there is only one pair of hands to do it all, the very thought is enough to tire one. Yet, keeping steadily at work, one pair of hands can do wonders, and keep home very attractive. The little ones must be cared for—requiring steady nerves and a good share of patience. Mothers, let us cultivate the latter—remembering the puny baby of to-day will soon be grown and gone. Then, only mothers, and He who formed a mother's heart, can know the loneliness their absence brings. Henry Ward Beecher tells of a silence that aches in the ears. Soon every mother realizes that ache—as children grow old very fast. When we least expect it our boy stands before us a man; our girl a woman. Now, mother, while we have them near, let us set a certain hour to gather the little ones around us, tell them a few plain tales, sing a few simple tunes in which they can join; and what is better than the twilight? We can impress upon their young minds the duties of life, and the beauty of that other twilight whose morning dawns on a brighter shore Yes, tell them of Jesus, our Elder Brother, who has said, "My yoke is easy and my burden is light." Believe me, mothers, we shall be better for those little chats; shall better know the children, and they will understand us. Childhood is very impressive. Quite a small prattler will notice the fleecy clouds, the beautiful sunset, and the pretty flowers, if mamma calls their attention to such beauties. The singing birds will cause a shout for mamma to come and listen, if we speak to our darlings once in a while. Let us never be too busy to answer the little ones; they need not be allowed to be teased. Let us show them in love. Perhaps the memory of this hour may save our darlings from falling, when surrounded by temptations. Our boys, who may appear rough and thoughtless, and we think do not even hear our talk with the little ones, soon come before us, men, and refer to those little chats with a quiver in their voices, that show us that our teachings were not in vain. Mothers, let us be faithful—not only in preparing meals in due season dressing the little ones in the fashion of the day; but let us also show them there is beauty in Nature, and love in the human heart—and that love is the essence of life. In years to come may they think of the twilight as mother's hour, and be better fitted for life's duties, as memory recalls our teachings.

Mrs. L. S. H.

Centre Hall, July 26, 1873.

How to Make Boys Like Farming.

When a boy comes home to night so tired that he would rather lie down on the hard side of a marble plank than eat his supper, do not tell him to hurry up and eat his supper so as to do that churning, when all the men and other boys are allowed to read the newspapers or to smoke unmolested. If you wish to induce a boy to think that Indian corn and potatoes are profitable crops, do not give him an old rusty hoe that no sensible man would use, and tell him if he will cut in smart when hoeing you will help him keep his row up even with the rest.

If you do not want to make a boy hate the country, when a task is assigned to him, do not pile on so much as to compel him to summon all his energies for three-fourths of the day to complete it, and then as soon as the job is done tell him he will have to go to mill or the cook can make no bread for the next day. If you do not want to make a boy hate operations on a farm don't tell him, while all the men are taking their "nooning" in harvest time, to water the horses and cows, and to hurry up so as to go with the men when they are ready to return to the field.

Do not encourage a boy to rear a nice calf or a nice colt and tell him the animal shall be his when grown up, and then sell the beast pocket the money, and tell the boy the price received don't pay for the hay, oats, and grass consumed. If you want to make an energetic and successful farmer of a boy, do not encourage him to rise before daylight so as to rake the wheat stubbles while the dew is on, telling him he shall have half the gleanings and then sell his part of the grain with the crop, and when he inquires about his share of the money tell him that the little sum received will not pay for half his board next winter.

Do not badger a good boy to the verge of desperation with the mischievous and obnoxious "go boys" system of management. If you want to make him like farming operations do not fret every ambitious desire out of the young aspirant with the repulsive and incessant ding dong of

John do this and John do that
When all John gets is an old straw hat

There is no precept and no reasoning that induce boys to stick to a farm like the cheering words "Come, come boys," always accompanied by an irreproachable example in leading the way. Strange as it may seem to some, boys are human.

Something to Sell.

One of the best and most successful farmers we ever had once told us that it was a rule with him to always have something to sell, no matter what the time of year. In the spring he always had seed grain of some sort, samples of wheat oats, barley, rye, corn—or potatoes, carrot seed, beet seed, salt pork, hams, corned beef, or fat stock of some sort. He had found that it paid to take extra pains to have seed grains or vegetables on hand in the spring; for since it had become known that he always had these to sell, he found no difficulty in selling all that he had at good prices—at prices that paid him for all the extra trouble and care in preparing and preserving them.

Another thing he said he had found useful to him; and he did not understand why farmers did not practice it more: When he had a stock of anything to sell he announced the fact in the local papers, just as the grocers and merchants do. He had found it profitable to purchase space in the paper by the year, and advertise his products according to season and the stock on hand. Then it was a part of his creed to produce the best. His seed was pure and clean. His stock fat and healthy. His fruit for sale was always perfect. His butter was gilt-edged. His hams were sugarcured, smoked just enough, and people were always glad to pay him two or three cents more per pound than for those found at the grocers.

He laid great stress upon the advantages of a home market for his products. His local reputation as a producer was of direct value to him, and he labored to keep it first-class. His grain did not go in bulk to a grain buyer who mixed it with inferior grades. It was sold to the local miller, who could afford to pay him more for it than the speculator, because he knew there were no screenings in it to depreciate its value. Thus he always had ready resources. When we asked if he did not find it more difficult to save his money when it came to him in dribbles, he replied, no. It was no more difficult for him to save than for the retail grocer or merchant. He deposited his money in bank, and only paid it out in the shape of a check, except for personal expenses. While he sold at retail, he bought, so far as practicable, at wholesale. He sold for cash or exchanged direct for something he needed, never trusted any man. He also bought for cash, and always had money on hand with which he could buy to advantage.

Now this mode of dealing, we are aware, is not always practicable; for all farmers do not live near large towns nor in populous districts; but if the farmer adopts a mixed system of husbandry, he may always have something to sell that will meet a local want. Something to sell is what the farmer labors for. The best mode of selling it is an equally important consideration; and our own experience and observation proves that there is no more profitable way than to try to supply all local demands first, and then if a distant market must be sought for any surplus, try to put that surplus in the least bulky shape possible.

Farmers Visiting Each Other.

Better, but not a substitute for the interchange of experience through the papers by farmers, is the practice of visiting and talking with each other; examining each other's means and methods of doing business, exchanging suggestions on the farm and stock management and relative to devices for facilitating work. Scarcely any farmer will consider his time lost who devotes a certain portion of it each year to this method of acquiring information and suggestions for use in his own husbandry; for there are some things farmers must learn which no amount of newspaper description will teach; nothing but actual observation will answer. This sort of education, it seems to us, is too much neglected by farmers. Experience has taught us how profitable it is, how much it saves in the way of experiments, and how much it enriches in the way of suggestions of improved methods, and by the accumulation of facts that never reach the public, because so few farmers ever write them. It is, therefore, urged here that no possible investment of time can give greater compensation than that expended in exchanging visits with the best farmers of a township or county.

A Land Measurer.

An instrument for measuring land or laying out certain spaces in a field consists of a handle of wood of such a size as may be conveniently taken in one hand, into the bottom of which are affixed two curved bars of heavy wire or light iron rod. A cross bar is loosely riveted in the lower part of one of the curved bars, and holes are punched into the other end of it the same size as a hole punched through the second curved bar. A small thumb-screw or spring key passing through the holes keeps the curved bars or legs of the instrument stretched apart at the required distance. If it is required to measure a certain number of rods along a fence, the legs are set 4 feet 1½ inches apart. Four of these spaces equal one rod. The instrument taken in the right hand is turned around as the person walks along in a straight line, and as the points of the legs touch the ground each one marks off a quarter of a rod. If drills or hills are wanted, the legs are set at whatever distance apart they are required, and the spaces may be set off as quickly as a person can walk.

HOW HAPPY I'LL BE.

A little one played among the flowers,
In the blush and bloom of the summer hours;
She twined the buds in a garland fair,
And bound them up in her shining hair.
"Ah me!" said she, "how happy I'll be,
When ten years more have gone over me,
And I am a maiden with youth's bright glow
Flushing my cheek and lighting my brow!"

A maiden mused in a pleasant room,
Where the air was filled with soft perfume;
Vases were near of antique mold,
Beautiful pictures; rare and old,
And she, of all the loveliness there,
Was by far the loveliest and most fair.
"Ah me!" sighed she, "how happy I'll be,
When my heart's true love comes home to me;
Light of my life, my spirit's pride.
I count the days till thou reach my side."

A mother bent over a cradle nest,
Where she soothed her babe to his smiling rest,
"Sleep well," she murmured, soft and low,
As she pressed her kisses on his brow;
"O child, sweet child how happy I'll be,
If the good God lets thee stay with me,
Till later on, in life's evening hour,
Thy strength shall be my strength and tower."

An aged one sat by the glowing hearth,
Almost ready to leave the earth;
Feeble and frail, the race she had run
Had borne her along to the setting sun,
"Ah me! she sighed in an undertone,
"How happy I'll be when life is done!
When the world fades out with its weary strife
And I soar away to a better life!"

'Tis thus we journey, from youth to age
Longing to turn another page,
Striving to hasten the years away,
Mighting our hearts with the future's ray;
Hoping on earth till its visions fade,
Wishing and waiting through sun and shade;
Turning when earth's last tie is riven,
To the beautiful rest that remains in heaven.

SUNDAY READINGS.—No. 20.

"Lord, what wouldst thou have me to do.—Acts."

This question comes to us in the solitude of the sick chamber, in the tumult and rush of life's crowded arena, and by the graves that cover the forms of the departed and mourned. It is intended for the merchant in his engrossing cares, for the reaper in the field, for the mother surrounded by her little ones, for the young and old, rich and poor, ignorant and learned.

It is individual in its application, and indirectly rebukes meddlesome interference with the spiritual condition of others. What wouldst thou have me to do?—not what should be the primary concerns of my neighbors. It is so natural to turn from the disagreeable contemplation of one's own short-comings to the weakness, follies or sins of one's associates; and too seldom is the beam in the eye a hindrance to the quick detection of a mote in the eye of another.

When the soul weary of sin, sick with disappointment, conscious of trusts betrayed and waning opportunities for amendment, would turn from the paths that lead away from light and peace, the first utterance of the awakened spirit would be, "Lord, what wouldst thou have me to do?" It feels the necessity of some positive act in the right direction, something tangible to mark the change that has begun in its spiritual condition.

What wouldst thou have me to do? The answer comes in the first duty that lies at one's hand; that accomplished, another and another in long procession fill up the span of existence, and if there come doubts, God pardons them through sincerity of purpose. The failure too often lies in overlooking or refusing the first duty proffered; that neglected, the others stand out in a less distinctive light and perhaps are never recognized.

Then again the grand achievement, the brilliant opportunity are waited for though they come to the few distant intervals. It is the small voice heard in the home the counting-room, the field wher, the husbandman labors, that speaks to the great heart of man, bidding it leave the results in the hands of God, and remain content in the consciousness of submission and obediance to the Divine will.

It is not simply what is thought or believed, but what is done that wakes the total of character. Action must prove the sincerity of conviction, and he who strives will find the field of action broad enough for all his energies. What man who ever sought ever failed to find opportunities for wide spread knowledge? Who does not know of the weak whom a judicious word might strengthen, or the falling whom a strong, a tender hand might have saved.

Lord, what wouldst thou have me to do? Do not point to thy neighbor into whose sphere of life thou canst not fully enter, and ask the vital question for him. God's answer to him will never reach your understanding, and was never intended to do so, since the answer lies only between the questioner and his God. It is strictly individual. Parent cannot answer for child, husband for wife, or friend for friend, since there were never two with the same responsibilities and temptations. Our tasks in life are varied as our lots. In some households sickness, poverty, death lay waste the pleasant places, while others are protected from these evils; but could we enter those others, we should find God's providence there, some sweet, some bitter unlike our own perhaps, quite as real.

If your yearning petition "What wilt thou have me to do?" be answered by light upon our doubtful path, then let us gladly press on to the fulfillment of each duty that presents itself, however great the sacrifice, however wearisome the toil; for in so doing the precious consciousness of a Father's approving smile makes the burden light, the dark places radiant with a beam from heaven.

Life's work with each of us will soon draw to a close. "A little while," said the Savior, "I am with you;" and thus might we say to the friends who surround, the scenes that so engross us. To work while the day lasts is true wisdom; to labor faithfully and hopefully is the Christian's bounden duty. In this labor alone the coveted rest is found, the sweetest peace, the brightest foreshadowing of the world without a cloud.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Vinegar Bitters are not a vile Fancy Drink, made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors, doctored, spiced, and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the native roots and herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the Great Blood Purifier and a Life-giving Principle, a Perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain longun well, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. In these complaints it has no equal, and one bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that a marked improvement is soon perceptible.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing also the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs and in Bilious Diseases.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-Head, Sore Eyes Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. Says a distinguished physiologist: There is scarcely an individual on the face of the earth whose body is exempt from the presence of worms. It is not upon the healthy elements of the body that worms exist, but upon the diseased humors and slimy deposits that breed these living monsters of disease. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics, will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS twice a week.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc., etc. In these as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

Dr. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters act on all these cases in a similar manner. By purifying the Blood they remove the cause, and by resolving away the effects of the inflammation (the tubercular deposits) the affected parts receive health, and a permanent cure is effected.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

The Aperient and mild Laxative properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are the best safe-guard in cases of eruptions and malignant fevers, their balsamic, healing, and soothing properties protect the humors of the fauces. Their Sedative properties allay pain in the nervous system, stomach, and bowels, either from inflammation, wind, colic, cramps, etc.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Directions.—Take of the Bitters on going to bed at night from a half to one and one-half wine-glassfull. Eat good nourishing food, such as beef-steak, mutton chop, venison, roast beef, and vegetables, and take out-door exercise. They are composed of purely vegetable ingredients, and contain no spirit.

——Will Humes is rapidly recovering from the effects of his last wrestle with his fiery steed. We hope he will soon be able to attend to his accustomed duties.

——Rev. Alfred Yeomans, of Orange, New Jersey, formerly pastor of the Presbyterian church at this place, was in town last Sunday, and preached morning and evening to that congregation.

——Mrs. Brown's paper says if it had not been for the Republican party the Mississippi river would have been lost. The unruly thing is running away now as fast as it can. President Grant is to blame.

——The Watchman reminded its readers of the "hotness of the season," about five hundred times in the last issue.—They should be extremely grateful that there is some one to tell them all these things.

——If any man will form one of a crowd to observe the antics of a plunging, kicking horse, and swearing, sweating Irishman, he will learn about fifty "best ways to start a balky horse," in five minutes.

——A gold Society Badge Pin belonging to R. F. Rankin was lost in this place last week. On the back of the pin the name was engraved in plain block letters. Any person finding the same and returning it to the owner at his drug store on Allegheny street will be suitably rewarded.

——The Beaver wing has its hold on a few people in this town. They own and run the Tuten paper in their own interests, notwithstanding the purple headed editor avows he owns it and does as he pleases. Why, he don't write half a dozen locals, or two sticks of editorial a week for it. This clique does all.—Watchman.

For breadth, depth, and general massiveness of appearance, that is the most successful lie we have have ever heard, and we have been to Washington twice.

——A very creditable Literary and Dramatic entertainment was given by the distinguished actor, Harry Howard, and the popular elocutionist, George O. Boal, of this place, at Reynolds' Hall on last Friday evening, to a large and select audience. A dozen small boys and a few silly, chattering young ladies (?) made themselves quite as prominent as the actors, but their performances were of less credit to themselves and less entertaining to the audience.

——The silly attempt of the Watchman to clear the skirts of P. Gray Meek of the odium of the legislative back-pay steal is "too thin" to require any reiteration of the facts stated by us in our last issue. We give the Republicans and Democrats too, (many of whom are outspoken in their denunciation of the corrupt trickery of the slang scribbler of the Watchman), credit for too much sense to be deluded by such twaddle.—Meet facts with facts, and we are ready to argue the point.

——Mr. B. F. Philips of Aaronsburg, has torn down his old storeroom and is about to erect in its place, a new and more commodious building, running back from the street fifty feet. We were informed that this old store had become too small to accommodate the constantly increasing demands of his business, hence the change. Mr. Philips is an energetic, enterprising man, of shrewd business capacity, and has, by his strict attention to business and pleasant, courteous manners, secured a large and profitable patronage. His new store-room will be completed in about two months.

——A boy harnessed a good sized dog to a pair of small wheels. This he thought to be a pretty smart arrangement and the dog seemed to appreciate it also, so they started out together up Lamb st. At the corner of Water st. two smaller dogs observed this nice little arrangement and made up their minds Mr. truck-horse was putting on too much style, and accordingly lay to take a little of the conceit out of him. The boy observing the state of affairs, unharnessed his dog and told him to "go in, Skip," which he did, the boy in the meantime, assisting now and then with a stone. This raised the ire of a small boy quietly taking in the events from the stoop, who seemed somewhat interested in the two dogs, and he decided to stone the one dog when the boy decided to stone him. This set the small boy's lungs in motion, and he gave good evidence that he would not die of consumption very soon. The affair was getting interesting and we waited for further developments, and it soon developed by a frizzly headed, bare footed woman making her appearance upon the arena, who slightly went for boy No. 1 with a stick. Then the affair continued to develop, (as we cautiously stepped around the corner where we could see and not be in the way), by the appearance of a man who pulled the stick away from the woman and kindly called her an old hag, for which her husband extracted several of his front teeth and assisted him to lie down. The young man sadly withdrew to a more retired spot to make a mathematical calculation of the damages. The "old hag" cuffed the ears of the small boy and told him to "git into the house, ye dirty brat." Boy No. 1 went to look for his dog, who, with his tail crowded under his back, was rapidly enticing the two dogs up the street, while Paddy proudly folded his arms across his breast and stood alone in his glory.

——Attention is directed to the advertisement of the Bellefonte Press Co's Book Bindery. It is a branch of industry which has long been needed in our County, and we hope it will be well sustained. No pains or expense have been spared to make it one of the best in Central Pennsylvania, as we understand books can be bound in as good style and at the same prices as charged in large cities. A discount of 10 per cent is allowed in all orders received within the next two weeks. When our readers living in the county come to town, they will save money by packing their Magazines, old Bibles, (and other books,) Republicans, Watchmans, Reporters, etc, bring them along, and leave them at Bellefonte Press Co. Office, near plaining mill dam, and have have them bound in good shape for preservation and reference.

——Another match broken up. This was between a clerk in a well known dry good store and a charming young lady on Allegheny Street. It was so warm on Friday Evening after the dramatic performance in Reynold's Hall, that she had the parlor window up and he stood on the lawn and they cooing each other, and he was reaching up for another kiss when the sash came down like a flash, and knocked the peak off his nose, scalped his chin, and he hopped around so madly, that the old gentleman thought he was drunk and had him kicked out of the yard with a great deal of ostentation. He says he can never go there again after having his feelings so badly hurt.

——Our country patrons will find it to their interest before coming to Bellefonte to trade to examine our advertisements. The enterprising, wide awake men in every branch of business are patrons of our advertising columns and they continually have new announcements to make. By examining our advertisement our readers will find some new feature presented every week. You will find conspicuously located the advertisments of our best grocers, dry goods dealers, hardware dealers, apothecaris, &c. Men who have something to sell and who are continually replenishing with new and have a fresh supply of goods to show their customers.

——Men, women and children are getting shod now. Nothing of B. L. Batcheller is visible above the tower of shoe boxes but his topknot, except when he goes up for another pair, and it is interesting to study the emotions that are at work within by the wrinkles of his scalp. Ah! no one can understand the mighty thoughts that surge through his brain, as he is asked "has he not got something a little cheaper." We who have an independent income of $100 a year rarely think of this.

——And now a 5½ foot vein of fossil ore has been discovered in Brush Mountain opposite the baggage office at Tyrone. A shaft was sunk under the direction of S. C. Stewart, Esq., to the depth of ten feet, from the bottom of which a drift eighteen feet in length was made, at the end of which the vein was found. Prospecting will be commenced at other points along the mountain.

——Jack writes his locals with a led pencil and then carefully applies the blotter before giving them to the compositor. He says nobody, unless he has been deprived of them can understand how handy these blotters are.

——Fifty new subscribers last week.

——Go to Joseph A. Rankin for good, reliable Fire Insurance. Business established in 1850.

——Go to J. Welch & Co. for blanks of every description. See his advertisment in another column.

——Writing machines are coming into use. They are worked with keys and keyboard something similar to playing on a piano.

——If any one doubts that we have fifteen hundred subscribers let them call at our sanctum and count the names on our mailing book.

——Our "local" is spending a few days in Pittsburgh and "Bobbie" does the locals this week. Say something complimentary Jack, as you always do.

——A local option post master takes the postal cards home to read through. He says that no obscene cards shall be delivered through his office if he has to stay up all night.

——Wilkinson declares Tom. Burnside can't fish a bit. He says he rode twenty miles a short time ago, stood in the water all day, but caught nothing—until he got home.

——The Brockerhoff House "bus" carries loads of travelers to that excellent house from every train. Messrs. D. Johnson & Sons, by their polite attention to the wants of their guests and their unsurpassed accommodations are winning an enviable reputation.

——A Camp-meeting will be held under the auspices of the M. E. Church, on land belonging to Henry Meek and Mr. Kreps, near Pine Grove Mills, commencing Aug. 13th. Friends from a distance invited.

In behalf of committee.

——The Watchman has been sent to a subscriber for eleven years, who has never paid a cent for it. The other day the paper was returned to the patient and long-suffering publisher with the affecting pencil note on the margin:—"Gone to a better world." The editor says it is all right, he will collect the bill when he dies.

——"Good heavings," Bro. Brisbin would you drive us crazy? By what hypothesis could you have been deluded into the belief that Vol 1, No 1, dated Jan. 1, 1873, would entertain us? On the contrary its perusal induced an acute case of hyperaesthesia of the optical organism. How could you be guilty of such farachronism.?

——Information wanted of George Stafford, by his brothers Christopher and Michael, who are now in Clearfield, Pa. He left Clearfield about the 1st of August, 1872, and has not been since heard of by his brothers. Information from Ireland to his advantage is in the possession of his brothers, and they would like to know of his whereabouts. Other papers will confer a favor by copying.—Clearfield Republican.

——Jack has got it again—board walk—and the council ought to attend to it. That walk to Roopsburg should be put in thorough repair, and we would suggest likewise a board fence eight feet high all along the Creek to prevent Jack from falling overboard. He gets terribly near sighted sometimes, and it is astonishing how those planks dance about. Something must be done to hold that walk down in these trying local option times.

——On last Thursday afternoon while Mr. John Roak was engaged in placing some brick on one of the towers of the new Catholic church Altoona, by some accident he lost his balance and fell to the ground, a distance of some sixty feet. Dr. Christy was in attendance but Mr. Roak never recovered from the shock and passed away. The deceased resided with his mother on Fifth avenue, between 12th and 13th streets, and was an industrious and good citizen.

——Our friend Albert Landis a young an enthusiastic fisherman, before starting out on one of his angling expeditions the other evening, carelessly left his fishing apparatus lying on the stoop for a moment while attending to some other duty, and while thus absent, the cat, probably actuated by hunger and the smell of fish, approached the spot and laying to with a relish quietly demolished bait, hook and line, leaving but the pole as a relic of the memorial past. At last accounts the cat was doing well. That cat must be blessed with a cast iron stomach.

——One of the most thrifty and enterprising towns in Centre County is Howard. It contains one of the most extensive iron works in the state and the general appearance of the place indicates life, energy and rapid growth. Among its most enterprisng and best known merchants is the firm of Lucas Bros. grocers, coal and wood dealers. For groceries every thing in their season can be found at this store, which for price and quality are unsurpassed. They have just received a large stock of coal of all grades, which is offered at the lowest rates. Now is the time to buy, coal will be higher next winter.

Pic-nic.—The M. E. Sunday School of this place held its third annual Pic-nic in the grove near the Snow Shoe intersection on Thursday the 31st ult. Bright and early on Thursday morning, young, old and middle aged, could have been seen coming from the various points of the town in every direction wending their way to the railroad depot, with smiling countenances indicative of happy anticipation of a real gala day in store for them. At 8.20. A. M. Mr. Rhoads, the obliging Superintendent of the Snow Shoe Railroad, had the excursion train all ready to receive the little folks, big folks and all the necessary paraphermalia to make a pic-nic a pleasure and success. The engineer signaled the time of departure by the shrill whistle of his locomotive, and the excursion train steamed out with as happy a crew as ever boarded a car. A half hour's ride brought the three hundred excursionists to their destination, where they speedily debarked for the woods. Swings were promptly erected, croquet grounds arranged and the gala day began with a lively spirit and our enthusiastic determination on the part of every one to make it a day of real enjoyment. Although several devines were present, among whom were Rev. T. W. Reese presiding elder of the district, and Rev. Myers of Baltimore, yet the ministereal dignity, for the occasion, was dispensed with, and all was unrestrained merry enjoyment. During the day a very elegant repast was surved up, by the matrons of the Church and school, which was participated in with a relish and appetite such only as the amusement and exercise of a pic-nic can possess one with. After the days scampering, romping, croqueting, &c. the party embarked for home, arriving at five o'clock P. M. as cheerful as when it left in the morning. The day was propitious, and the pic-nic a very pleasant and enjoyable affair.

——M. M. Musser who holds forth in the dry goods and grocery line down near Woodward in Hanes Township will in about two months remove to Aaronsburg and occupy the store now temporarily occupied by B. F. Philips there is at present but one store in this place and as competition is the life of trade this new enterprise will no doubt add life to the mercantile business of that pleasant town and we hope also prove advantageous to the people in the reduction of prices and the very best assortment of goods from which to chose. It will also give them what is found most always in Yankeedom, a democratic and republican store keeper where. just before an election the politicians will congrgate to lay plans for the coming campaign and canvass the opposing candidates. Mr. Philips must look sharp to business for his friend Mr. Musser will no doubt give him a lively opposition.

——The Presbyterian society at Jacksonville held a picnic in the shady park in front of their church on Saturday last, when ice cream, lemonade, candies, cake, fun and pretty girls were abundant. The weather was very fine and the occassion one that will long be remembered by all present. Our distinguished townsman Nathaniel Beck, the genial and good looking proprietor of the tobocco emporium in the Bush House informs us that he was there with all his cousins, consequently the supply of ice cream, &c, aforesaid must have been something stupendous, and the crowd who witnessed the ascension of the large and beautiful paper balloon one that would do credit to the "go off" of the much talked of and dreamed of trans-Atlantic Graphic.

——We are fearfully and wonderfully made. We know we must be, for we are told by Jack, the man with the magenta hair, that we are a "sucker," "whelp," "villain," "lier," and several other terrible things besides being a "Nue Ingland Yankee." It's terribly crushing to be told such things.

——The first city boarders who have spent their "summer season out" at Aaronsburg are now stopping at J. Limbert's hotel and are very well pleased with their courteous landlord, fine accommodations and the beautiful country.

——The "Watchman" again reiterates its assertion that the Republican party is divided into two factions of which Gen. Beaver is the head of one and Gen. Yocum the head of the other. This is a state of affairs most earnestly hoped for and most assiduously labored for by the "Watchman" and Mrs. Brown's paper, or, rather the establishment of a wide spread conviction among the Republicans of Centre county that such is the case. We are autherized to say that Gen. Beaver is not a candidate for the Senatorship or any other office, will not accept any nomination of offered him and shall take no active part in politics this fall. Furthermore we believe Gen. Yocum to be the best man yet mentioned in the Republican party for that office. From personal acquaintance with him we know him to be a thorough, upright, honest Republican, and a man who undoubtedly would carry the entire strength of the party, and a gentleman who if nominated we should most heartily support. Gen. Yocum received a most flattering manifestation of his popularity through the entire Senatorial district, in the last campaign in which he took a prominent part, and his private and political career since that time has been such as to increase the confidence of the people. He is undoubtedly the most available and most desirable candidate in the party, and as such we recomend him to the consideration of the convention.

The divisions and dissatisfaction existing in the Democratic party—Pennsvalley (the Democratic strong hold where the circulation of the "Watchman" is even less than that of the Republican) controled by the Centre Hall "Reporter" and "Berichter," being antagonistic to and jealous of the Democracy on this side of the mountain, and the decided opposition of the whisky and local option factions, makes the success of a united and persistent effort of the Republican party with a good candidate highly probable. The "Watchman" realizes this danger and sees the only safety of the Democracy in a division of the Republican party. Their own malcontents they cannot reconcile, while the controling influence of the "Watchman" is fast losing ground with the best men among the Democracy by its low-lifed blackguardism, and the unprincipled trickery of its proprietor, and the steady persistant and gentlemanly opposition of the "Centre Hall Reporter." Republicans, the opportunity is now presented when you can, with a powerful and energetic candidate as Gen. Yocum will surely be, secure a Republican representative in the Senate. Shall it be done!

—The Reading Times says: On Thursday the rails at certain points on the East Pennsylvania Railroad, between Allentown and Emaus, expanded by the action of extreme heat to such a degree that several trains had to lay over until the displaced rails were put in order. In some places the rails were expanded so much that they were forced nine inches out of their proper positions.

For the Republican.

Messrs. Editors:—Will you permit one of your subscribers to call your attention, and that of your readers, to one of the questions which will come up before the people at this fall's election. I allude to the threatened repeal of the Local Option law. This ought not to be any longer an open issue so far as this Representative and Senatorial district is concerned, for on the 21st day of last February it was submitted to a direct vote, and the will of the people so emphatically expressed, as to leave no room for doubt or uncertainty upon the question. But the whisky ring in our county are determined not to submit to the majority, notwithstanding it has been so fully and fairly expressed—nearly two to one—and they have laid their plans so as to secure (as they think) the election of Representatives and Senators who will, in defiance of the voice of the people, vote to repeal the law. In order to carry out their nicely arranged plan, they are calculating largely upon the gullibility of that large class of our citizens who voted against License, and are determined that, for three years at least, the no-license-system shall have a fair trial. Who desire that, if possible, the question shall be kept out of politics, but have at the same time made up their minds that THE RIGHT shall be sustained, and that any party which lends its machinery to cloak or cover this giant wrong—this "sum of all villainies"—this canker of the nineteenth century—must take the consequences.

Gentlemen politicians, Republicans and Democrats, it is much to be desired that this question should be kept out of the mire of ordinary politics. It has been passed upon in this Representative and Senatorial district by the tribunal of last resort, in this Republican country—the ballot-box. See to it, then, you who pull the wires of your respective parties, that no man is placed in nomination, by either party, for Legislature or Senate, who is not fully in accord with the popular verdict rendered on Friday, February 21, 1873, and can be relied upon to defend it against the treacherous and cowardly attacks of our unscrupulous and unprincipled Whisky Ring.

Can any one say the Republican party is not fairly entitled to candidates of this character? If so, let him look at the vote on Local Option cast by such staunch Republican districts as Union, Unionville, Harris, Boggs, &c. Does any one doubt that fair dealing requires that the Democratic candidates should be equally above suspicion? If so, let him cast his eyes over the returns of old Haines, Penn, Miles, Walker, Marion, &c., &c.

McBRIDE TRAGEDY.

Last week a person by the name of Nelson E. Wade, formerly a brakeman on the P. & E. railroad, brutally murdered Mrs. Isabella McBride and dangerously wounded her husband John McBride, who resided near Linden, a few miles above Williamsport Pa. For years the McBride family have been known to be in possession of a large sum of money which they kept on their premises. Wade was arrested the next evening after the murder and has made the following confession.:

"I am an American born, and have relations living near here. I was born out on the Blooming Grove road, beyond the Poor House; the afternoon I committed the murder, I walked up the road from the city; went to McBride's house, and calculated that it was about the time they had done their milking; last winter when I was at Mrs. Glosser's near by, Mrs. Glosser told me of the trunk up stairs; and while I was there last winter I made it my business to find out how much money these old folks had. On reaching the house on Tuesday afternoon, I was met in the yard by one of the dogs which barked at me. I soon made up with him and walked into the house when McBride wanted to know what I wanted there; I told him I wanted a drink of milk, when he told me to go to the cellar where the old lady was; she asked me if I had money to pay for the milk; from the cellar I returned to ask the old man for bread, but found that he had bolted the door; when he unbolted it I shoved my foot in and the old man struck at me; I then knocked him done with my fist; the dog then made at me and I knocked him down."

I then struck the old man three times with the stick, when he cried murder. I then hit him another rap with the club; I then went to the cellar and struck the woman; but as I have told you several times, I did not shoot her. as I had no pistol, but bought one at Trout's yesterday.

When I came out of the cellar after killing the old woman, the old man was up, and the dog was licking the blood off his hands; I then hit him again. I then procured an axe, went up stairs and broke open the chest and found the trunk I had heard Mrs. Glosser talk about; it was too heavy, and I made two trips, that night carrying away the money.

The club I had used was cut in the woods near by with a small jack knife. If they will look in the cornfield they will find where the grass is trampled down. that is where I looked over the money. I got between sixty and seventy thousand dollars. I will not tell where it is. When I come to die, I will tell some poor man where it is; but no rich man shall have it. There are two bags buried in the city—two above, and two below.

I have had fifty names in my life time, Nelson E. Wade is my right name; were I to do this over again I would exchange all the silver for paper money; that is what bothered me, it was too heavy.

Sheriff Piati then remarked to him, "you must have nerve to do this deed," when he replied: Yes, sir, I am hardened. When a child I dreaded the word murder, but after going through the rebellion, and on the frontier with Kit Carson and others, I shrank not from any crime; They may take me out and hang me to-morrow; I have only once to die; I have killed several woman before this one; in regard to the money I got exchanged one hundred and eighty dollars is in twenty dollar gold peices at one of the banks in the city, and got fifteen per cent. They asked me where I got it. I told them I was a cattle speculator from Canada.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Editor Republican.—We desire to bring forward the name Hon. John Irwin, Jr., for the office of State Senator. He is a man of unflinching integrity and acknowledged ability and if nominated would be sure to be elected. Let our Republicans turn in and, by nominating Mr. Irwin, reflect credit on the party by giving him the highest office within our gift at the coming election. Howard.

Messrs. Tutens.—Please announce the name of Levi A. Miller as a suitable person to fill the office of assemblyman for the next year. Mr. Miller is a live, working republican, was a brave soldier in the late war, and if nominated will be more likely to carry the county against democratic rule and corruption than any other man. B.

Messrs Editors.—As the Republicans of Centre county will soon be called on to nominate candidates to fill the several offices, allow me to name Dr. Miller Stewart of Burnside township as a man eminently qualified to represent the people in the general assembly. Dr. Stewart is a fine scholar and a gentleman in every sence of the word who if nominated will be a power within himself against the sham democracy. Snow Shoe.

Editor Republican,—Allow me, through the columns of your valuable paper, to present the name of Wm. Stover, of Aaronsburg, Haines twp., for the office of Commissioner. He is an upright, honest man and firm Republican, and will influence a strong vote in the county. Millheim.

MARRIED.

At Pine Glenn, July 26th, by the Rev. J. Gray, Mr. Nathan Taylor to Miss Maggie Swope, both of Snow shoe.
